Drier than the Dirt: Land Use Permits and Appeals

Drier than the Dirt:

Land Use Permits, Rezonings and Appeals

Scott Foster & Karen Cohen

I. Introduction

Zoning amendments and land use permits are important development tools. These zoning actions allow landowners to expand the development potential of their land and, subject to approval from the local elected governing body, establish uses not otherwise permitted by right under the locality's zoning ordinance. The law pertaining to these zoning actions is grounded in state and local law. The "yes or no" on a landowner's or developer's request for approval is at the discretion of the local elected governing body; therefore, in addition to the law, there are significant elements of retail politics, grassroots organizing and strong public advocacy involved.

The law surrounding land use permits is constantly evolving—particularly to address the development impacts of new and emerging technologies. Full coverage of the many applicable laws – from constitutional law to environmental law to local government law (just to name a few) – is beyond the scope of this outline. Instead, this outline is divided into two sections. First, the outline provides an overview of the zoning amendment and land use permit application and approval process. Second, the outline addresses the process for challenging the grant or denial of these local land use decision, including common issues and recent case decisions.

II. Zoning Amendment and Land Use Permit Application Process

A. General Background

1. There are two types of zoning amendments: zoning text amendments and zoning map amendments. A zoning text amendment occurs when the regulations of the zoning district are amended. A zoning map amendment (often referred to as a "rezoning") occurs when the zoning district applicable to a specific property is changed. See Va. Code Ann. § 15.2-2286(A)(7).

2. Land use permits are issued by a locality on a discretionary basis for land uses not permitted by right but authorized by the zoning ordinance by such permit. See Va. Code Ann. § 15.2-2201. There are three primary types of land use permits: special use permits, conditional use permits, and special exceptions. Uses allowed by a land use permit are those typically considered to have a greater potential impact on surrounding properties or the public generally, and as such, should be subjected to a case-by-case review. This review often generates specific conditions attached to the land use permit designed to address the impacts of the given use.

3. The approval of zoning text amendments, rezonings and land use permits is a legislative act by the elected governing body of the jurisdiction. See Rowland v. Town Council of Warrenton, 298 Va. 703, 718 (2020);

Newberry Station Homeowners Ass'n v. Bd. of Supervisors of Fairfax Cnty., 285 Va. 604, 621 (2013).

B. Application Process

1. Initial Application Process

a. Zoning text amendments may be initiated by: (i) resolution of the governing body; or (ii) by motion of the local planning commission. See Va. Code Ann. § 15.2-2286(A)(7).

i. In practice, subject to the language of the jurisdiction's zoning ordinance and local practice, an owner or contract purchaser may also initiate a zoning text amendment through the locality's application process. Some jurisdictions require the elected governing body to endorse the proposed amendment before the matter is sent to planning commission for review. Before initiating a zoning text amendment, it is essential to confirm the process with the given jurisdiction.

ii. Va. Code Ann. § 15.2-2286(A)(7) enables localities to provide for specified intervals at which zoning text amendments are considered.

b. Rezonings may be initiated by: (i) resolution of the governing body; (ii) by motion of the local planning commission; or (iii) petition of the owner, contract purchaser with the owner's written consent, or the owner's agent. See Va. Code Ann. § 15.2-2286(A)(7).

c. Applications for land use permits may be made by any property owner, tenant, government official, department, board, or bureau. See Va. Code Ann. § 15.2-2310.

d. Most jurisdictions require a "pre-application" meeting, where the application concept is discussed and zoning ordinance compliance is confirmed. This initial meeting also offers an opportunity for an applicant and the locality's planning staff to discuss the proposed project and the applicable rules and regulations. This meeting, along with the provisions of the locality's zoning ordinance, typically helps form the "scope" of an application, including the applicable studies and reports required to process the application. This initial meeting begins what often becomes multiple meetings and exchanges on a given application, depending on its complexity. Typically, the locality's staff will route the application to multiple agencies for comment, including environmental, safety (police and fire), transportation, economic development, etc.

e. The jurisdiction generates a "staff report" on the application, providing the planning commission and the local governing body with a summary of the application, its strengths and weaknesses, suggested conditions of approval (discussed below), and, at times, a "staff recommendation" suggesting approval or disapproval of the respective application.

i. A rezoning, where an applicant applies to change the zoning of certain property to a different district, may also include "proffers" which are conditions that supplement the regulations of the zoning district and often relate to improvements to public infrastructure necessitated by a given development or project. See Va. Code Ann. § 15.2-2296-15.2-2303. These conditions are offered by the owner of the subject property (or by their authorized agent). Statutes and case law around proffers is complex, and the drafting and negotiation of proffers should be done with great care by both the applicant and the locality.

ii. A zoning text amendment, where an applicant seeks to modify the zoning ordinance applicable to a certain district, typically includes specific language proposed by the applicant to modify the district to allow for or better facilitate a given use. Often the locality's planning staff will suggest modifications to this language, which may or may not generate consensus on the proposed change between the applicant and the jurisdiction.

iii. A land use permit will also likely include conditions of approval, but these conditions are typically generated by the locality's planning department and, ultimately, are imposed by the applicable authority as part of the issuance of the permit, although applicants often submit suggested conditions with their permit applications. These conditions, like proffers, are negotiated between the Applicant and planning staff to address specific development related issues that are not covered by the zoning ordinance.

C. Review Process

1. Review by the Planning Commission

a. Every locality is required to have a local planning commission. See Va. Code Ann. § 15.2-2210. Members of the planning commission are appointed by the elected governing body of the locality, which can range in size between five and fifteen members, for a maximum term of four years. The members must be residents of the locality, and one half of the membership must be owners of real property. Some localities have a member of the elected governing body on the planning commission. See Va. Code Ann. § 15.2-2212. Planning commissions are, generally, tasked with "promot[ing] the ordinerly development of the locality and its environs." Va. Code Ann. § 2210. The planning commission has a myriad of responsibilities including, but not limited to, preparation of the comprehensive plan, periodic preparation of the locality's official zoning map, changes to zoning districts, preparation of the zoning ordinance and amendments thereto, and review of land use permits. See Va. Code Ann. §§ 15.2-2223, 15.2-2233, 15.2-4311, 15.2-2285. The planning commission is primarily an advisory body to the locality's governing body. Va. Code Ann. § 15.2-2210.

b. Zoning Text Amendments and Rezonings. Zoning text amendments and rezonings must be reviewed by the planning commission, who, in most scenarios, will make a recommendation of approval or denial to the elected governing body of the locality. This review takes place at a public hearing (discussed below in Section F). Planning commissions have 100 days to act on an application after it has been presented for their consideration. If they fail to act within that time, the application is deemed to have been recommended for approval. See Va. Code Ann. § 15.2-2285(B). Planning commissions often recommend additional conditions, modifications of development terms, etc. as part of their recommendation to the elected governing body on a rezoning.

c. Land Use Permits. Most jurisdictions have their planning commission review and make a recommendation on applications for land use permits. Some localities choose to bypass review by the planning commission, pursuant to Va. Code Ann. § 15.2-2286(3), allowing the elected governing body to be the sole arbiter of these applications, but this practice is limited. Some localities delegate the review and approval of land use permits to a board of zoning appeals, but this, too, is relatively infrequent. See Va. Code Ann. § 15.2-2309(6). Like zoning text amendments and rezonings, planning commissions will hold a public hearing on the application and then, in most scenarios, will make a recommendation of approval or denial of the land use permit to the elected governing body. This recommendation must also be made within 100 days. See Va. Code Ann. § 15.2-2285(B). Planning commissions often will recommend additional conditions, modifications of development terms, etc. as part of their recommendation to the elected governing body.

d. Public Facilities Review. Certain "public facilities" require a separate review by the planning commission for consistency with the locality's comprehensive plan. See Va. Code Ann. § 15.2-2232. Most private applicants will not encounter this requirement for typical residential or commercial developments, but some uses, including solar and energy storage facilities and certain telecommunications facilities, are deemed to be "public facilities" and must be subjected to this review by planning commission. In this instance, the planning commission will review the project and make a determination whether or not the project's location, character and extent are "substantially in accord" with the locality's comprehensive plan. The planning commission must transmit its findings to the locality's governing body, which may choose to overrule the planning commission upon a majority vote. If the planning commission determines that the proposed land use is not substantially in accord with the comprehensive plan, the applicant may appeal the determination to the elected governing body within ten (10) days of action by the planning commission. The local governing body must hear the appeal within sixty (60) days unless this timing requirement is waived by the applicant. If the applicant fails to appeal and the elected governing body chooses not to overrule the planning commission's determination, the planning commission's determination becomes binding. This is one of the few scenarios where a planning commission action is legislative, making attention to this process of significant importance.

2. Review by the Elected Governing Body

a. All zoning amendments will be reviewed and approved or denied by a majority vote of the elected governing body (the board of supervisors, city or town council, as applicable). Unless a locality has opted to delegate review of land use permits to a board of zoning appeals, the elected governing body will also review and approve or deny applications for land use permits. Action on these applications can only occur once a public hearing has been held, as discussed below.

b. A governing body is required to make a decision on a resolution, motion, or petition within a reasonable time not to exceed 12 months, unless the applicant requests or consents to a later time. See Va. Code Ann. § 15.2-2286(A)(7).

i. The general consensus on calculation of this 12 month period is that it commences either on (a) the subject application having been deemed complete by the locality, or (b) having been reviewed by Planning Commission at a public hearing. Opinions differ based on the locality.

ii. While this 12-month time period derives from the code section on rezonings, many localities have ordinances that apply this same time period to land use permits. Even in the absence of such an ordinance, the general view is that the due process requirement to be heard in a reasonably timely manner should apply with equal force to any hearing on a legislative land use approval.

D. Role of the Comprehensive Plan in Evaluating Rezoning and Land Use Permits.

1. The comprehensive plan is a guide for the physical development of the jurisdiction, with the "purpose of guiding and accomplishing a coordinated, adjusted and harmonious development of the territory, which will, in accordance with present and probably future needs and resources, best promote the health, safety, morals, order, convenience, prosperity and general welfare of the inhabitants, including the elderly and persons with disabilities." Va. Code Ann. § 15.2-2223. Because it is a general guideline and advisory in nature, it does not have the legal status of a zoning ordinance. Bd. of Supervisors of Fairfax Cnty. v. Allman, 215 Va. 434, 441 (1975).

2. Consistency with the locality's comprehensive plan is often the most important factor in approving a rezoning or land use permit. As a result, in approving any rezoning or land use permit, consistency with the comprehensive plan is always a factor that the elected governing body must consider and may be the basis for approval or denial of an application. Bd. of Supervisors of Loudoun Cnty. v. Lerner, 221 Va. 30, 36-37 (1980) (application to rezoning); Nat'l Mem'l Park, Inc. v. Bd. of Zoning Appeals of Fairfax Cnty., 232 Va. 89, 92-93 (1986) (application to land use permit). That being said, because it is used as a "guide," inconsistency with the comprehensive plan does not mandate denial of the application. Bd. of Supervisors of Fairfax Cnty. v. Robertson, 266 Va. 525, 536 (2003). Reliance on the comprehensive plan is a reasonable basis on which a jurisdiction can base its decision, but it need not be the only factor. City Council of City of Salem v. Wendy's of W. Va., Inc., 252 Va. 12, 18 (1996).

   a. General questions often asked:

      i. Is the proposed zoning of the parcel subject to an application for rezoning consistent with the comprehensive plan and the plans for future land use contained therein?

      ii. Does proposed use conform with the surrounding uses and vision for the area of the jurisdiction where the property is located?

3. Topics covered in Comprehensive Plans (Va. Code Ann. § 15.2-2223)

a. General development patterns and areas of focused future growth and redevelopment.

b. Transportation and Road and Transportation Mapping including specific infrastructure needs and recommendations for future projects.

E. Standard of Review Applicable to Zoning Text Amendments and Rezonings

1. Factors to be Considered When Drawing Zoning Districts (Rezoning). Pursuant to Va. Code Ann. § 15.2-2284, the following factors must be given reasonable consideration when a parcel is considered for rezoning, and it is an applicant's obligation to demonstrate how their proposal aligns with these factors:

a. The existing use and character of the property;

b. The comprehensive plan;

c. The suitability of property for various uses;

d. The trends of growth or change;

e. The current and future requirements of the community as to land for various purposes as determined by population and economic and other studies;

f. The transportation requirements of the community;

g. The requirements for airports, housing, schools, parks, playgrounds, recreation areas and other public services;

h. The conservation of natural resources;

i. The preservation of flood plains;

j. The protection of life and property from impounding structure failures;

k. The preservation of agricultural and forestal land;

l. The conservation of properties and their values and;

m. The encouragement of the most appropriate use of land throughout the locality.

2. Unlawful Discriminatory Housing Policies. Pursuant to Va. Code Ann. § 36-96.3, localities are prohibited from discriminating in the application of land use ordinances:

a. On the basis of race, color, religion, national origin, sex, elderliness, familial status, source of funds, sexual orientation, gender identity, military status, or disability;

b. Because a housing development containing affordable housing units; or

c. By prohibiting or imposing conditions upon the rental or sale of dwelling uses, except for short-term rentals as defined in Va. Code Ann. § 15.2-983.

3. Standard of Review Applicable to Land Use Permits.

a. Suitable Regulations and Safeguards

i. Va. Code Ann. § 15.2-2286(3) states that a zoning ordinance may provide for the granting of land use permits under suitable regulations and safeguards.

ii. This phrase has been interpreted to mean that "[a] locality may unilaterally impose reasonable conditions on the issuance of such permits or exceptions, in contrast to proffers that must come voluntarily from the applicant." Stapes v. Prince George Cnty., 81 Va. Cir. 308, 320 (Prince George County 2010) (quoting John H. Foote, Planning and Zoning, in Handbook of Virginia Local Government Law 1-1, 1-48 (Susan Warriner, ed. 2001)).

iii. The General Assembly amended Virginia Code § 15.2-2286(3), which became effective on July 1, 2024, stating that "[c]onditions may include the period of validity for a special exception or special use permit; however, in the case of a special exception or special use permit for certain types of projects, the legislature has set a minimum." See e.g. 2024 Va. H.B. 650 (residential projects, the period of validity shall be no less than three years).

F. Advertisement of Public Hearings for Zoning Text Amendments, Rezonings, and Land Use Permits

1. Hearing and Notice Requirements.

a. The notice and hearing requirements of Virginia Code § 15.2-2204 must be met before a zoning text amendment, rezoning, or land use permit may be authorized. It is key for any applicant to work with the attorney representing the jurisdiction to ensure the notice associated with the public hearings on their proposal complies with this statute, as defects in this process can lead to additional required hearings or, if a project is approved, potential challenges to the approval.

b. Notice under Virginia Code § 15.2-2204(A)

i. Content of Notice. The descriptive notice standard comes from now amended Virginia Code § 15.2-2204(A) which previously stated that "[e]very such advertisement shall contain a descriptive summary of the proposed action and a reference to the place or places within the locality where copies of the proposed plans, ordinances or amendments may be examined." Va. Code Ann. § 15.2-2204(A), amended by 2022 Va. S.B. 1151.

ii. This standard was interpreted by the Supreme Court of Virginia to require the locality to provide notice of what action was going to be taken, the nature of the action, and the affected properties so that the public could determine whether it was of any interest to them. See Gas Mart Corp. v. Bd. of Supervisors, 269 Va. 334, 345 (2005); Glazebrook v. Bd. of Supervisors, 266 Va. 550, 554-55 (2003).

iii. In 2023 the section was amended striking the language "contain a descriptive summary of the proposed action and a reference to" and replacing it with the word "identify." 2022 Va. S.B. 1151.

iv. Thus, the statute now reads "[e]very such advertisement shall identify the place or places within the locality where copies of the proposed plans, ordinances, or amendments may be examined." Va. Code Ann. § 15.2-2204(A).

v. The second enactment clause of Senate Bill 1151 states that a work group of the Virginia Code Commission shall convene and review the requirements in the Code for providing notice of hearings, and other intended actions. One of the things to be examined was "(iii) the amount of information required to be contained in each notice." Thus, it would ostensibly seem that the General Assembly was acting to require less information to be provided in notices for hearings on land use permits.

vi. Notice Under Amended § 15.2-2204(A) effective July 1, 2024. Virginia Code § 15.2-2204(A) requires that notice of a hearing for a land use permit must be published twice in a newspaper published or having general circulation in the locality.

1) The first notice must appear no more than 28 days before the date of the meeting referenced in the notice.

2) The second must appear no less than seven days before the date of the meeting referenced in the notice.

3) If a locality submits a correct and timely notice request to a newspaper and the newspaper fails to publish the notice, or publishes the notice incorrectly, such locality shall be deemed to have met the notice requirements so long as the notice was published in the next available edition of a newspaper having general circulation in the locality.

4) The locality itself may impose other notice requirements. The local zoning ordinance must examined to ascertain such requirements, typically mandating placement of signs on the property at designated locations and providing notice to adjoining landowners.

G. Special Provisions Regarding Land Use Permit Validity

1. Va. Code § 15.2-2209.1:1. Automatic extension until July 1, 2025 all Conditional Use Permits, Special Use Permits and Special Exception Permits which meet certain date requirements.

   a. Section 15.2-2209.1:1 provides that "for any valid special exception, special use permit, or conditional use permit, or any modifications thereto, outstanding as of July 1, 2020, any deadline in the exception permit, . . . is extended until July 1, 2025, or such longer period as may be agreed to by the locality. "

2. Role of the "Enactment Clause"

   a. Enactment clauses are not shown in the official code posted on the Legislative Information System or in the Virginia Code Annotated. Instead these provisions are found in the Acts of Assembly published upon the passing of the legislation.

   b. A enactment clause is "part of the body of the act which states the precise action taken by the legislature, thereby establishing the jurisdiction and the authenticity of the act." Gilmore v. Landsidle, 252 Va. 388, 394 (1996).

   c. Courts may rely on enactment clauses to "determine the precise content of legislation." Id. at 395.

3. Enactment Clause in § 15.2-2209.1:1

   a. The third enactment clause of this section states that "any extension for approvals outstanding as of July 1, 2020, shall apply to any such approvals granted subsequent to July 1, 2020, that expire prior to July 1, 2025. This provision is declarative of existing law."

   b. The Supreme Court of Virginia has noted that the term "declarative of existing law" is "used occasionally by the General Assembly when it wishes to clarify a statute or correct an interpretation of a statute with which it disagrees." Va. Int'l Gateway, Inc. v. City of Portsmouth, 298 Va. 43, 54 n.1 (2019).

III. Appeals & Litigation

Litigation generally arises in two scenarios.[1] First, the locality grants the zoning text amendment, rezoning, or land use permit, and a thirty party challenges that approval. Second, the locality denies the zoning text amendment, rezoning, or land use permit, and the applicant challenges that denial. The same standards and principles apply to litigation of these land use decisions.

A. Statutory Basis

The process for challenging the grant or denial of a land use decision depends on which local governing body made the decision. Substantively, the process is the same, but the statutory cause of action depends on whether the locality's governing body or its board of zoning appeals issued the decision.

1. Decision by Locality's Governing Body

Code § 15.2-2285(F) provides for a right of action to contest the decision of a local governing body—for example, a county's board of supervisors or city council—"adopting or failing to adopt a proposed zoning ordinance or amend thereto or granting or failing to grant a special exception." This statute applies to zoning text amendments, rezonings, as well as land use permits (including special use permits and conditional use permits). See Rinker v. Fairfax, 238 Va. 24, 30 (1989) (holding the "terms 'special exception' and 'special use permit' are interchangeable."); cf. Boyer v. Frederick Cnty. Bd. of Supervisors, Record No. 0846-23-4, 2024 Va. App. LEXIS 313, at *1 (Va. Ct. App. June 4, 2024) (appeal of conditional use permit under Code § 15.2-2285(F)). An appeal must be filed with the circuit court within thirty (30) days of the date of the local governing body's decision. See Va. Code Ann. § 152-2285(F).

2. Decision by Locality's Board of Zoning Appeals

Where a locality has delegated authority to its Board of Zoning Appeals ("BZA"), Code § 15.2-2314 provides a right of action to contest the BZA's land use decisions. A petition under Code § 15.2-2314 must be filed with the circuit court within thirty (30) days of the BZA's decision.

3. Declaratory Judgments

The longstanding, traditional manner in which to bring an appeal under Code §§ 15.2-2285(F) or 15.2-2314 is through a declaratory judgment action. See Berry v. Bd. of Supervisors, 302 Va. 114, 133-34 (2023) (holding a declaratory judgment is "the proper vehicle for challenging" a land use decision); see, e.g., Friends of Rappahannock v. Caroline Cnty. Bd. of Supervisors, 286 Va. 38, 45 (2013) (same). Recently, however, in Boyer v. Frederick Cnty. Bd. of Supervisors, the Court of Appeals seemed to question this well-established process, potentially suggesting there may be a difference whether the case was is styled as a declaratory judgment action or as "an appeal under Code § 15.2-2285." 2024 Va. App. LEXIS 313, at *6-7. This appears to be a distinction without a difference.

B. Threshold Issue: Standing

When a locality has approved a land use application (zoning text amendment, rezoning, or land use permit), and an individual wishes to challenge that decision, the most important threshold issue to consider is standing. When a plaintiff does not claim an ownership interest in the specific property subject to the land use decision, courts apply the test set forth in Friends of the Rappahannock v. Caroline County Board of Supervisors to determine whether that individual or entity has standing to bring the lawsuit. See 248 Va. at 48-49. The plaintiff must satisfy two elements:

1) The plaintiff must own or occupy real property "within or in close proximity to the property that is subject of the land use determination." Id. at 48.

2) The plaintiff must demonstrate a particularized harm to "some personal or property right, legal or equitable, or imposition of a burden or obligation upon the plaintiff different from that suffered by the public generally." Id. at 48-49.

A plaintiff's failure to satisfy either (or both) of these elements means the plaintiff does not have standing to bring the lawsuit challenging the decision.

1. Close Proximity

The "close proximity" inquiry usually looks at the distance between the property owned or occupied by the plaintiff and the property subject to the land use decision. There is no bright line rule about what constitutes "close proximity," but several decisions provide guideposts.

- Adjacent properties. Parcels that are contiguous or immediately adjacent to the parcel subject to the land use decision are in "close proximity" sufficient to confer standing. See Anders Larsen Tr. v. Bd. of Supervisors, 301 Va. 116, 122 (2022); Cumberland v. Bd. of Supervisors, Rec. No. 0769-22-2, 2023 Va. App. LEXIS 630, at *14 (Va. Ct. App. Sept. 19, 2023).

- Close proximity is determined in feet, not miles. Virginia courts generally require a plaintiff's property to be within one (1) mile of the land use decision. The Supreme Court of Virginia has held a plaintiff who owned/occupied property up to 2,000 feet away was in "close proximity" to the land use decision. See Riverview Farm Assocs. Va. Gen. P'ship. v. Bd. of Supervisors, 259 Va. 419 (2000) (holding plaintiff who was 2,000 feet away was in "close proximity"); Morgan v. Bd. of Supervisors, 302 Va. 46, 52, 62 (2023) (holding plaintiff who was 1,200 feet away was in "close proximity"). One circuit court decision has held that a landowner who owned/occupied property that was approximately 4,100 feet away was sufficiently in "close proximity" to have standing. Nat'l Tr. for Hist. Pres. v. Orange Cnty. Bd. of Supervisors, 80 Va. Cir. 321, 325 (Orange 2010); see also Grenata Homeowners Ass'n v. Loudoun Cnty., 93 Va.Cir. 192, 211 (Loudoun 2016) (holding plaintiff that was 480 feet away was in "close proximity").

- Properties further away. The Supreme Court of Virginia has not considered what constitutes the outer limits of "close proximity." One circuit court held that a plaintiff who owned/occupied property approximately two (2) miles away from the land use decision was not in proximity. Hefflin v. Caroline Cnty., 83 Va. Cir. 507, 520 (Caroline Cnty. Cir. Ct., 2010); see also Friends of the Meherrin, LLC v. Bd. of Supervisors, Case No. CL22-181 (Lunenburg Cnty. Cir. Ct. May 2, 2023) (holding plaintiffs who resided over nine (9) miles away from land use decision did not have standing). Another circuit court considered certain factors in determining whether a plaintiff was in "close proximity" to the land use decision, including whether the challenged use "could be seen, smelled, or heard on his property, or that it [would] discharge emissions onto his property." Carolinas Cement Co. v. Zoning Appeals Bd., 52 Va. Cir. 6, 16 (Warren Cnty. Cir. Ct. 2000).

2. Particularized Harm

The "particularized harm" inquiry examines whether the plaintiff has demonstrated a harm to "some personal or property right, legal or equitable, or imposition of a burden or obligation upon the plaintiff." Friends of the Rappahannock, 286 Va at 48-49. Importantly, this harm must be "different from that suffered by the public generally." Id.

The easiest way to satisfy this standard is to allege that the harm has already occurred. See, e.g., Seymour v. Roanoke Cnty. Bd. of Supervisors, 301 Va. 156, 169 (2022) (holding "[i]n this case, however, the appellants have alleged that they have already sustained several forms of harm"). Examples of "particularized harms" include, but are not limited to: (i) additional maintenance costs due to increased vehicular traffic associated with the use; (ii) increased danger due to vehicular traffic associated with the use; (iii) dust, noise, and light pollution associated with the use. See id.

The plaintiff need not have already incurred the harm. See id. at 169. An "allegation of future injury may suffice if the threatened injury is 'certainly impending' or there is a 'substantial risk' that the harm will occur." Morgan, 302 Va. at 61 (quoting Susan B. Anthony List v. Driehaus, 573 U.S. 149, 158 (2014)). This inquiry requires "specific allegations" of harm arising out of the use in question. Id. Allegations which are abstract, generalized, or speculative do not suffice. Id.

In Friends of the Rappahannock v. Caroline County Board of Supervisors, the plaintiffs alleged various forms of harm, including: (i) land disturbance, noise, and industrial activity will frighten away wildlife, prevent or deter new wildlife from entering the area, and render property useless for hunting; (ii) nonspecific allegations that the use will interfere with a right of way, create noise, and increase airborne particulates; and (iii) the use will end the scenic beauty of the location, harm recreational use of a river, and increase dust, noise, and traffic from river barges. See 286 Va. at 42-43. The Court held these allegations did not meet the "particularized harm" standard because they lacked "factual background" that tied the "particular use of the property" to specific "off site" harms. Id. at 49-50. The Court noted that the land use permit contained conditions requiring the particular use to comply with the locality's restrictions on noise, particulate matter, and pollution, and the plaintiffs did not allege facts indicating the permit conditions were inadequate. Id. at 50.

By contrast, in Morgan v. Board of Supervisors, the plaintiffs included "specific allegations of particularized harm" arising out of the use. 302 Va. at 61. These harms included: (i) increased noise levels due to vehicle back-up alarms, in violation of the local noise ordinance; (ii) anticipated flooding due to the topography of the project; and (iii) night-sky pollution due to taller lighting poles. Id. The Court held that these allegations were not speculative, but rather asserted "a direct cause-and-effect relationship" between the zoning decision and the harm. Id. at 67-68.

Interpreting these decisions, in Cumberland v. Board of Supervisors, the Court of Appeals analyzed whether a plaintiff's allegations that the BZA's decision "authorized an encroachment of tree limbs" onto his property, "thereby obstructing his view of the waterfront and diminishing the value of his own land." 2023 Va. App. LEXIS 630, at *9. The Court held these allegations were not "sufficiently definite" to satisfy the particularized harm standard. Id. at *20. The Court noted the plaintiff "merely contends that encroachment will inevitably occur," "[w]ithout explaining how or when." Id. Therefore, while the Court accepted that the encroachment "could" occur, it held that such encroachment was not "reasonably certain to occur." Id. at *20-21.

Practice Note: The Supreme Court of Virginia, in Morgan, analyzed the plaintiffs' allegations of particularized harm, "assumed to be true," for purposes of demurrer. 302 Va. at 62. The Court specifically left open the question of "[w]hether the [plaintiffs] can actually prove these allegations." Id. at 68. Therefore, while a plaintiff's allegations of particularized harm may be sufficient to survive demurrer, the plaintiff must ensure these allegations can be proven at trial, or if also challenged via plea in bar.

C. Procedural Issues

Appeals of land use decisions have a unique procedure:

1) The locality's decision is presumed to be reasonable.

2) The plaintiff bears the initial burden to show probative evidence that the locality's decision was unreasonable.

3) The burden then shifts to the locality to produce "some" evidence of reasonableness sufficient to make the question fairly debatable.

These presumptions and burdens make appeals of land use decisions extraordinarily difficult to prosecute and more suitable to defend. The nuances of each of these procedural steps is set out below.

1. Presumption of Reasonableness

A locality's land use decisions are a legislative function. Bd. of Supervisors v. Jackson, 221 Va. 328, 333 (1980); Fox Spring Farm Ltd. P'ship v. Caroline Cnty. Bd. of Supervisors, Rec. No. 181276, 2020 Va. Unpub. LEXIS 9, at *7 (Va. St. Ct. Apr. 16, 2020) (quoting Bd. of Supervisors v. McDonald's Corp., 261 Va. 583, 589 (2001)). This presumption applies to both decisions by the locality's governing body and its BZA. Jackson, 221 Va. at 333; Trs. of the Christ & St. Luke's Episcopla Church v. Bd. of Zoning Appeals, 273 Va. 375, 380 (2007).

2. Probative Evidence of Unreasonableness

The party challenging the locality's decision bears the burden of presenting "probative evidence of unreasonableness." City Council of Va. Beach v. Harrell, 236 Va. 99, at 102 (1988); Richmond v. Randall, 215 Va. 506, 511 (1975). This requires a two part showing:

1) The applicant must show that the use proposed in the application is reasonable; and

2) The zoning ordinance, as applied to the land, is unreasonable.

Harrell, 236 Va. at 102; see also EMAC, LLC v. Cnty. of Hanover, 291 Va. 13, 22 (2016); Randall, 215 Va. at 511; Bd. of Supervisors v. Int'l Funeral Serv., Inc., 221 Va. 840, 842-43 (1981).

a. Reasonableness of the proposed use.

Few Virginia courts have analyzed the first element—whether the requested use is reasonable. In the case of land use permits, some—perhaps most—zoning ordinances identify land uses which are permitted by such permits. See, e.g., Roanoke City Zoning Ordinance, §§ 36.2-310, 36.2-315, 36.2-322, 36.2-327 (stating uses permitted by special exception); Richmond City Zoning Ordinance, §§ 30-413.12; 30-420.1:1; 30-426.1:1; 30-428.2; 30-433.3; 30-433.11.1; 30-436.2; 30-438.2; 30-440.2; 30-442.1:1; 30-444.2:1; 30-446.3 (stating uses permitted by conditional use permit); Henrico County Zoning Ordinance, §§ 24-4202(B), 24-4205 (stating uses permitted by conditional use permit). Given the locality has identified these uses as permitted by permit, such uses are likely reasonable. Cf. Cnty. of Lancaster v. Cowardin, 239 Va. 522, 526 (1990) (assuming proposed use is reasonable because it was specifically allowed under the zoning ordinance).

b. Unreasonableness of the locality's decision.

Most Virginia courts focus their analyses on the second element—whether the locality's land use decision was unreasonable. This generally requires "clear proof that the action is unreasonable, arbitrary, and bears no reasonable relation to the public health, safety, morals, or general welfare." EMAC, LLC, 291 Va. at 21.

i. Challenging the locality's process for issuing the decision.

1) Compliance with Zoning Ordinance.

One method to establish the unreasonableness of a locality's land use decision is to prove the locality failed to follow its own zoning ordinance. Localities are "not at liberty to disregard" their own zoning ordinance. Northampton Cnty. Bd. of Zoning Appeals v. Eastern Shore Dev. Corp., 277 Va. 198, 203 (2009). If a "permit is issued in violation of law, it confers no greater rights up on a permittee than an ordinance itself, for the permit cannot in effect amend or repeal an ordinance, or authorize a structure at a location prohibited by the ordinance." Hurt v. Caldwell, 222 Va. 91, 97 (1981) (quoting Segaloff v. City of Newport News, 209 Va. 259, 261 (1968)). Therefore, "[a]cts of a local governing body that are in conflict with its own ordinances exceed its authority and are void and of no effect." Eastern Shore Dev. Corp., 277 Va. at 203.

For example, in Renky v. Cnty. Bd., the Supreme Court of Virginia considered a locality's decision to rezone property without complying with the zoning classification eligibility requirement set out in its ordinance. 272 Va. 369, 376 (2006). Therefore, the Court held the locality's failure to follow its own zoning ordinance meant "its action was arbitrary and capricious, and not fairly debatable, thereby rending the re-zoning void and of no effect." Id. These same principles govern the grant or denial of a land use permit. See, e.g., Newberry Station Homeowners Ass'n v. Bd. of Supervisors, 285 Va. 604, 621-22 (2013).

2) Compliance with Virginia law.

Another method to establish the unreasonableness of the locality's land use decision is to prove the process did not comply with Virginia law. For example, the locality's failure to comply with statutory notice requirements renders the zoning decision invalid. See, e.g., Lawrence Transfer & Storage Corp. v. Bd. of Zoning Appeals, 229 Va. 568, 571-72 (1985) (invalidating special use permit for failure to give statutory notice); Parker v. Miller, 250 Va. 175, 175 (1995) (invalidating variance for failure to give statutory notice).

ii. Challenging the basis for the locality's decision.

There are few Virginia cases discussing what constitutes an unreasonable land use decision. The most common argument is that a locality's decision was unreasonable because it was discriminatory.

1) Compliance with Zoning Ordinance or Use Regulations.

When a party challenges a locality's decision denying a proposed use, the challenging party must establish something more than the proposed use complied with the locality's zoning ordinance or use regulations. See Cnty. Bd. of Arlington County v. Bratic, 237 Va. 221, 229 (1989).

2) Discrimination based on prior approvals.

"Discrimination in zoning decisions is impermissible if it is unjustified." McDonald's Corp., 261 Va. at 591. "[I]mpermissible discrimination in zoning actions is unreasonable, arbitrary, and capricious." Id. "To sustain a claim of impermissible discrimination, the party contesting the zoning action must show that 'a land use permitted to one landowner is restricted to another similarly situated.'" Id. (quoting Bd. of Supervisors v. Rowe, 216 Va. 128, 140 (1975)). Where the challenging party fails to establish the properties are similarly situated, it has failed to carry its burden of presenting probative evidence of unreasonableness. Id. at 593.

- Similarly Situated. The mere fact that two properties "are adjacent to one another is insufficient alone to establish" the properties are similarly situated. McDonald's Corp., 261 Va. at 591 (quoting Helmick v. Town of Warrenton, 254 Va. 225, 231 (1997)). Rather, this is a highly fact-specific inquiry that focuses both on the characteristics of the property—both physical characteristics as well as zoning.
    - A primary consideration is the physical characteristics of the sites, including, but not limited to: size, layout/configuration, road or street access, and usage. For example, in Bd. of Supervisors v. McDonald's Corp., the Court examined a number of factors distinguishing the subject property with the comparators, including:

- The subject property was much smaller than the comparison properties;
- The subject property was a single tenant site, whereas the comparison properties were multi-user shopping centers;
- The subject property had direct access to public roads, whereas the comparison properties did not;
- The subject property had only one access point, whereas the comparison properties had multiple access points;
- The subject property's entrance was much closer to an intersection than the comparison properties;
- The subject property had significantly higher estimated vehicular usage than the comparison properties, after adjusting for the differences in property size.

261 Va. at 591-93.

- Two properties which have different zoning may not be similarly situated. In EMAC LLC v. County of Hanover, the Court held two parcels were not similarly situated where the subject property did not have a validly issued conditional use permit, while the comparison property did. 291 Va. at 23-25. Similarly, in Helmick v. Town of Warrenton, the Court held parcels were not similarly situated where the subject project was subject to an approved subdivision plat which had to be vacated, while the comparison properties were not. 254 Va. at 231.

3) Reasonable grounds to deny a land use application.

By contrast, Virginia courts have identified numerous grounds as a reasonable basis to deny a land use application, including:

- The landowner or applicant failed to meet the requirements in the zoning ordinance. See Cowardin, 239 Va. at 526.
- The proposed use is inconsistent with the locality's comprehensive plan. See Nat'l Mem'l Park, Inc. v. Bd. of Zoning Appeals, 232 Va. 89, 92-93 (1986).
- The proposed use would have an adverse impact on the nature or character of the area. See Bractic, 237 Va. at 228-29.
- The proposed use would hinder or discourage the appropriate use of adjacent or nearby properties. See Nat'l Mem'l Park, Inc., 232 V a. at 93.

- The proposed use would have an adverse impact on roads. See Loch Levan Land Ltd. P'ship v. Bd. of Supervisors, 297 Va. 674, 693 (2019).

3. Reasonableness and the Fairly Debatable Standard

"If the challenging party presents probative evidence of unreasonableness, the locality must present sufficient evidence to show that the reasonableness of the decision." EMAC, LLC, 291 Va. at 22. "If the evidence of reasonableness is sufficient to make the question fairly debatable, the zoning action must be upheld upon judicial review. If the evidence of reasonableness is insufficient, the presumption of reasonableness is overcome and the zoning action cannot be sustained." McDonald's Corp., 261 Va. at 590 (citing Jackson, 221 Va. at 333).

"An issue is said to be fairly debatable 'when the evidence offered in support of the opposing views would lead objective and reasonable persons to reach different conclusions.'" McDonald's Corp., 261 Va. at 590 (quoting Williams, 216 Va. at 58). This does not require the locality to prove reasonableness by a preponderance of the evidence. See Bd. of Supervisors v. Stickley, 261 Va. 1, 7 (2002). The dispositive question is whether there was "any evidence" sufficient to make the issue fairly debatable. Bd. of Supervisors v. Robertson, 266 Va. 525, 536 (2003) (emphasis added). This is a low burden of proof. Cf. Town of Leesburg v. Giordano, 280 Va. 597 (2010). "If the reasonableness of the enactment is fairly debatable, a court will not substitute its judgment for that of the legislative body, and the legislation will be sustained." Harrell, 236 Va. at 101-102.

When evaluating the locality's evidence of reasonableness, there are a few critical takeaways:

- The locality is not bound by the evidence presented at a public hearing or the statements of the elected officials at the time of the vote—all competent evidence must be considered.
- The motives of the elected officials are irrelevant.
- A locality's staff reports are a critical source of evidence of reasonableness.
- Competing evidence, including a battle of the experts, is likely sufficient to establish reasonableness.
- Localities usually only fail to carry their burden when they do not have present evidence of reasonableness.

a. The locality is not bound by the legislative record.

When evaluating the reasonableness of the locality's decision, courts are not limited by the evidence presented at the public hearing or the statements of the elected officials at the time of the vote. Rather, "[i]n determining 'reasonableness,' . . . a court must look not to what a legislative body was told or to what it knew when it acted, but to what it could have known at the time." Indus. Dev. Auth. v. La France Cleaners & Laundry Corp., 216 Va. 277, 282 (1975). Therefore, the court "must consider all competent evidence adduced at trial concerning facts and circumstances existing at the time the legislative action was taken," even if that evidence does not exist in the legislative record or was not expressly considered at the time of the vote. Id.

b. Motives of legislative bodies are irrelevant.

The Supreme Court of Virginia has held: "Judicial review of legislative acts must be approached with particular circumspection because of the principle of separation of powers, embedded in the Constitution." Ames v. Painter, 239 Va. 343, 349 (1990).

> Courts are not concerned with the motives which actuate members of a legislative body in enacting a law, but in the results of their action. Bad motives might inspire a law which appeared on its face and proved valid and beneficial, while a bad and invalid law might be, and sometimes is, passed with good intent and the best of motives.

Blankenship v. Richmond, 188 Va. 97, 105 (1948). These principles, therefore, "preclude[] judicial inquiry into the motives of legislative bodies elected by the people." Ames, 239 Va. at 349 (citing Tel. Co. v. Newport News, 196 Va. 627, 639 (1955)).

c. Staff reports often provide evidence of reasonableness.

Localities usually consider staff reports—memoranda prepared by the locality's staff summarizing their analysis of the application, its compliance with laws, ordinances, and regulations, views of interested parties, and proposed recommendations—when making their decision on the application. These reports are part of the legislative record of the locality's decision and, therefore, may be made part of the pleadings by motion craving oyer. See Byrne v. City of Alexandria, 298 Va. 694, 699-701 (2020). Staff reports may then be a source of evidence demonstrating the reasonableness of the locality's decision. See, e.g., id., at 701-702 (considering staff report as evidence of reasonableness of locality's decision); Eagle Harbor LLC v. Isle of Wight Cnty., 271 Va. 603, 618 (2006) (considering staff report as probative evidence of reasonableness); Hartley v. Bd. of Supervisors, 80 Va. App. 1, 22 (2024) (considering planning commission's staff report as evidence of reasonableness of the locality's decision).

d. Competing evidence and "battle of the experts."

A locality's decision is "fairly debatable" where there is evidence on both sides of the issue—both for and against the decision. See Bell v. City Council of Charlottesville, 224 Va. 490, 495 (1982). The quintessential example is the "battle of the experts" whereby both the locality and the challenging party have expert witness testimony concerning the reasonableness of the decision. When presented with such competing evidence, the Supreme Court of Virginia has held:

> The question in this case is not who presented the greatest number of expert witnesses or even who won the battle of the experts. Rather, the question is whether there is any evidence in the record sufficiently probative to make a fairly debatable issue of the Board's decision to deny [the applicant] a special use permit.

Giordano, 280 Va. at 608 (quoting Stickley, 263 Va. at 11). This same logic applies to lay witness testimony. See Harrell, 236 Va. at 130.

e. Insufficient evidence of reasonableness.

Courts overturn localities' decisions when they fail to present evidence demonstrating reasonableness. Several cases are instructive.

- Norton v. City of Danville, 268 Va. 402 (2004). The applicant sought a certificate of appropriateness to install a glass door on his house, which was located in a historic district. The locality denied the application indicating that it "fe[lt] the door was wooden" when the house was built. However, the locality did not determine the appearance or composition of the door when the house was built. Evidence developed through discovery showed the house was built in the 1880s, but the locality's decision was based on photographs of the door from 1992 showing it was all wood. The Court held the locality failed to carry its burden of proof to show the original nature of the door was wooden, particularly where other nearby houses (and other doors in the subject house) were glass.

- Estes Funeral Home v. Adkins, 266 Va. 297 (2003). The locality adopted an ordinance levying fees for solid waste disposal, which establishes various classifications and fee structures. The locality failed to present evidence of the locality's basis for establishing the classifications, the manner in which it classified service recipients, or setting the rates. Given this absence of evidence, the Court held the locality did not present evidence of reasonableness sufficient to make the issue fairly debatable

D. Relief

Even if the party successfully challenges the locality's land use decision, the parties simply go back to the application process—in effect, a "do over." That is because Virginia courts cannot compel localities to issue land use permits or make zoning decisions. See Richmond v. Randall, 2125 Va. 506, 513 (1875) ("Nor does this Court or any court have power, even when it finds the existing zoning ordinance invalid and a requested use reasonable, to order approval of a special use permit . . ."). Instead, the court will remand the issue back to the locality for a new vote and decision. See id. at 514 ("The new decree will . . . remand the cause to City Council for further legislative action."). There is an exception to this where an unconstitutional condition has been proven by the aggrieved applicant to have been a factor in the grant or denial of the approval. See Va. Code § 15.2-2208.1 (allowing "any applicant aggrieved by the grant or denial by a locality of any approval or permit, . . . where such grant included, or denial was based upon, an unconstitutional condition pursuant to the United States Constitution or the Constitution of Virginia, shall be entitled to an award of compensatory damages and to an order remanding the matter to the locality with a direction to grant or issue such permits or approvals without the unconstitutional condition and may be entitled to reasonable attorney fees and court costs.").

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. Background: Corporate Transparency Act (CTA)

The federal Corporate Transparency Act[1] ("CTA") went into effect on January 1, 2024. It requires all "reporting companies" (as defined by the CTA) to file initial reports and updates with the U.S. Treasury Department's Financial Crimes Enforcement Network ("FinCEN") disclosing certain information about the reporting company, including the name and address of each owner of the reporting company. The CTA was originally enacted in 2021 under the National Defense Authorization Act (NDAA). Its stated purpose is to enable law enforcement to better counter money laundering and other criminal activity, which it purportedly accomplishes through introducing new reporting requirements applicable to small and mid-size businesses, as well as reforming aspects of the Bank Secrecy Act of 1970 (the "BSA"). FinCEN has published final regulations on the reporting requirements, as well as a number of guidance documents.

2. Introduction to CTA Legislation and Final Regulations

a) The CTA represents the most significant reformation of the BSA since the USA Patriot Act of 2001.

b) The CTA was enacted under the Fiscal Year 2021 NDAA by the Senate, overriding a presidential veto.

c) Section 403 of the CTA amends the BSA by adding a new section, 31 U.S.C. § 5336, entitled "Beneficial Ownership Information Reporting Requirements."

d) On September 30, 2022, FinCEN finalized the reporting requirements to implement the CTA and published guidance on the final regulations.[2] The effective date of these regulations was January 1, 2024.

e) The CTA reporting requirements cast a broad net, affecting all who advise on and carry out entity formation, governance, planning, and tax compliance (e.g., lawyers, accountants, financial advisors, business consultants, and more).

f) The CTA is designed to apply to smaller, private entities, which may not already be subject to other reporting requirements.

   i. For lawyers working with entities that fall under the CTA it is critical to:

      A. Identify and notify existing entities of their filing obligations.
      B. Notify all newly formed entities of their filing obligations.
      C. In connection with any entities formed in 2024 or thereafter, identify "Company Applicants" (as defined by the statute) and disclose such Company Applicants in the initial filing.

[2] See Beneficial Ownership Information Reporting Requirements, 87 Fed. Reg. 59498 (Sept. 30, 2022).

D. Notify entities of their obligation to file updates when ownership, address, or other information changes.
E. Determine best practices for compliance.
F. Prepare client alerts or letters.

3. General Requirements

a) Reporting: All "Reporting Companies" (see below for definition) must disclose beneficial ownership information and the identity of Company Applicants to FinCEN.

i. In General: In accordance with regulations set forth by FinCEN[3], each reporting company must submit a report that contains the information required by 31 U.S.C. § 5336(b)(2)(A).

A. Existing Entities: Entities that were formed before January 1, 2024, must report the required information before January 1, 2025.

B. New Entities formed in 2024: Entities formed in calendar year 2024 must report the required information within 90 calendar days after formation.

C. New Entities formed in 2025 or After: Entities formed in calendar year 2025 or thereafter must report the required information within 30 calendar days after formation.

ii. FinCEN launched the BOI E-Filing website for reporting beneficial ownership information (https://boiefiling.fincen.gov) on January 1, 2024.[4]

A. The form can be accessed by going to FinCEN's BOI E-filing website and selecting "File BOIR."[5]

B. There is no fee for submitting a beneficial ownership information report to FinCen.[6]

b) Required Information: 31 U.S.C. § 5336(b)(2)(A).

i. In accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury[7], the required report must identify each beneficial owner of the applicable reporting company and, if the entity was formed in 2024 or thereafter, each "Company Applicant" with respect to that reporting company. This information includes:

A. Full legal name
B. Date of birth
C. Current residential or business street address; and D. Unique identifying number obtained from FinCEN; or E. Unique identifying number from an acceptable identification document:
    1. Driver's license;
    2. Identification document; or
    3. Passport

ii. Reporting Companies are also required to report specific information on the Reporting Company to FinCEN (31 C.F.R. § 1010.380(b)(1)(i)):

A. Full name of reporting company.
B. Business address of reporting company.
C. Jurisdiction of formation of the reporting company.
D. Unique identification number for reporting company.

c) Updates.

If there is a change in previously reported information, reporting companies must file an updated report within 30 days.

4. Definition of Reporting Companies

"Reporting Companies" are defined broadly and include both foreign and domestic companies.

a) Domestic Reporting Companies are:
    i. Created by the filing of a document with a Secretary of State or a similar office under the law of a State or Indian Tribe. 31 U.S.C. § 5336(a)(11)(A)(i).
    ii. This includes all corporations and limited liability companies.
    iii. Note that common law trusts are not considered reporting companies, but some trusts may fall under the definition of "Beneficial Owner" as set forth in 31 C.F.R. § 1010.380(d).

b) Foreign Reporting Companies are:
    i. Formed under the law of a foreign country and registered to do business in the United States by the filing of a document with a Secretary of State or similar office under the laws of a State or Indian Tribe. 31 U.S.C. § 5336(a)(11)(A)(ii).

c) Statutory trusts, business trusts, and foundations;

i. These organizations are considered reporting companies only if they were created by the filing of a document with a Secretary of State or similar office under the laws of a State or Indian Tribe.
ii. Entities should also consider if any exemptions to the reporting requirements apply to them. For example, a foundation may not be required to report beneficial ownership information to FinCEN if the foundation qualifies for the tax-exempt entity exemption.[8]
iii. Trusts are not considered reporting companies if they are registered with a court of law for the purpose of establishing the court's jurisdiction over any disputes involving the trust.[9]

5. Reporting Companies Exemptions

The CTA and FinCEN established 23 types of entities that are exempt from the beneficial ownership reporting requirements. Below is a description of some of the more useful exemptions:

a) "Large operating companies" that employ over 20 employees on a full time basis in the United States, and, in the previous year, had more than $5 million in gross receipts.

b) Public accounting firms registered in accordance with section 102 of the Sarbanes-Oxley Act.

c) Insurance companies.

d) Bank and bank-like entities.

e) Broker dealers, investment companies as set forth in 15 U.S.C. § 80a-3 or an investment advisor as defined in 15 U.S.C. § 80b-2.

f) Any organization described in Internal Revenue Code ("I.R.C.") § 501(c) and exempt from tax under I.R.C. § 501(a).

g) Publicly-traded companies.

h) Subsidiaries of certain exempt entities.

i) Certain inactive entities that were formed before January 1, 2020.

The following is a comprehensive list of the types of entities exempt from reporting.

6. Beneficial Owners

If a Reporting Company is required to file a report with FinCEN, it must disclose its beneficial owners.

a) Beneficial Owner. Under 31 U.S.C. § 5336(a)(3) and 31 C.F.R. § 1010.380(d), "Beneficial Owner" means, with respect to an entity, an individual who, directly or indirectly, through any contract, arrangement, understanding, relationship, or otherwise—
   i. Exercises "substantial control" over the entity; or
   ii. "Owns or controls" not less than 25% of the ownership interests of the entity.

b) Substantial Control. Under 31 C.F.R. § 1010.380(d)(1)(i), the following are deemed to exercise substantial control:
   i. A senior officer of a reporting company;

ii. Anyone who has authority over the appointment or removal of any senior officer or a majority or dominant minority of the board of directors of a reporting company; and
iii. Anyone who has direction, determination, decision making of, or substantial influence over, important matters affecting a reporting company, e.g.:
    A. Major expenditures or investments
    B. The selection or termination of business lines or ventures

c) Substantial Control Under 31 C.F.R. § 1010.380(d)(1)(ii), an individual may directly or indirectly, "including as a trustee of a trust or similar arrangement," exercise substantial control over a reporting company through:
    i. Board representation.
    ii. Ownership and control of the majority of the voting power or voting rights of the company, rights associated with a financing arrangement, or interest in a company.
    iii. Control over one or more intermediary entities that separately or collectively exercise substantial control over a reporting company.
    iv. Arrangements or financial or business relationships, whether formal or informal, with other individuals or entities acting as nominees.
    v. Any other contract, arrangement, understanding, relationship, or otherwise.

d) Ownership/Control is generally an arrangement that establishes ownership rights in the reporting company. Examples of ownership interests include shares of equity, stock, voting rights, or any other mechanism used to establish ownership.[10]

e) An individual may directly or indirectly control an ownership interest in a reporting company through any contract, arrangement, understanding, relationship, or otherwise, including:
    i. Joint ownership with one or more persons of an undivided interest in such ownership interest.
    ii. Through another individual acting as a nominee, intermediary, custodian, or agent on behalf of such individual.
    iii. With regard to a trust, the following conditions indicate that an individual owns or controls ownership interests in a reporting company through a trust:
        A. A trustee or other individual (if any) with the authority to dispose of trust assets;
        B. Beneficiary who (1) is the sole permissible recipient of income and principal; or (2) has the right to demand a distribution of or withdraw substantially all of the assets; or
        C. Grantor/settlor who has the right to revoke the trust or otherwise withdraw the assets.

f) What should a reporting company report if its ownership is in dispute?

[10] Beneficial Ownership Information FAQ, FINANCIAL CRIMES ENFORCEMENT NETWORK, FinCEN.gov (last visited Jun. 27, 2024).

i. If ownership of a reporting company is the subject of active litigation and an initial BOI report has not been filed, a person authorized by the company to file its beneficial ownership information should comply with the reporting requirements.[11]
ii. If an initial BOI report has been filed and if the resolution of the litigation leads to the reporting company having different beneficial owners, the reporting company must file an updated BOI report within 30 calendar days of resolution of the litigation.

g) An initial BOI report should only include the beneficial owners as of the time of the filing. If anything changes the company must update its BOI report.

7. Beneficial Owners Exceptions

a) A Beneficial Owner does not include:

i. A minor child, as defined in the State in which the entity is formed, if the information of the parent or guardian of the minor child is reported.

ii. An individual acting as a nominee, intermediary, custodian, or agent on behalf of another individual.

iii. An individual acting solely as an employee of a corporation, limited liability company, or other similar entity and whose control over or economic benefits from such entity is derived solely from the employment status of the person.

iv. Right of inheritance exceptions:
A. The CTA refers to a "future" interest associated with the right of inheritance, not a present interest that a person may acquire as a result of exercising such a right.
B. The CTA definition of "Beneficial Owner" excludes an "individual whose only interest" in the entity "is through a right of inheritance."
C. FinCEN clarifies that individuals who may in the future come to own ownership interests in an entity through a right of inheritance do not have ownership interests until the inheritance occurs.

v. FinCEN provided more clarity on the application of the inheritor exception:
A. Once an individual has inherited an ownership interest in an entity, that individual owns that ownership interest and is potentially subject to the beneficial owner reporting requirements. 31 C.F.R. § 1010.380(d).
B. Once an ownership interest is inherited and comes to be owned by an individual, that individual has the same relationship to an entity as any other individual who acquires an ownership interest through another means. 31 C.F.R. § 1010.380(d).

C. The precise moment at which an individual acquires an ownership interest in an entity through inheritance may be subject to a variety of legal authorities, such as the terms of a will, the terms of a trust, applicable state laws, and other valid instruments and rules. 31 C.F.R. § 1010.380(d).

8. Access to Beneficial Ownership Information

a) FinCEN will take a phased approach to providing access to beneficial ownership information.
   i. The first phase, expected to begin in the spring of 2024, will be a pilot program for a handful of Federal agency users.
   ii. The second phase, expected in the summer of 2024, will extend access to Treasury offices and other Federal agencies engaged in law enforcement and national security activities that already have memoranda of understanding for access to Bank Secrecy Act information.
   iii. The third phase, expected in the fall of 2024, will extend access to additional Federal agencies engaged in law enforcement, national security, and intelligence activities, as well as to State, local, and Tribal law enforcement partners.
   iv. The fourth phase, expected in the winter of 2024, will extend access to intermediary Federal agencies in connection with foreign government requests.
      A. The fifth phase, expected in the spring of 2025, will extend access to financial institutions subject to customer due diligence requirements under applicable law and their supervisors.

9. State Agencies and Beneficial Ownership Information Request

a) State, local, and Tribal law enforcement agencies—i.e., government agencies authorized by law to engage in the investigation or enforcement of civil or criminal violations of law—will be able to request beneficial ownership information from FinCEN in certain circumstances. A State, local, or Tribal law enforcement agency, however, can only request beneficial ownership information from FinCEN if authorized by a "court of competent jurisdiction" to seek the information in a criminal or civil investigation. The state, local, or Tribal law enforcement agency also must meet certain other access requirements, including entering into a memorandum of understanding with FinCEN that describes how the agency will protect the security and confidentiality of the information.[12]

b) Additionally, state regulatory agencies that supervise financial institutions for compliance with customer due diligence requirements may also request beneficial ownership information from FinCEN to conduct such supervision. Like other domestic government agencies, to receive beneficial ownership information from FinCEN, state regulatory agencies must also enter into a memorandum of understanding with FinCEN that describes how the agency will protect the security and confidentiality of the information.[13]

10. Company Applicant

a) Under 31 U.S.C. § 5336(a)(2) and 31 C.F.R. § 1010.380(e) the term "Company Applicant" means any individual who—

i. Files an application to form a corporation, limited liability company, or other similar entity under the laws of a State or Indian Tribe; or

ii. Registers or files an application to register a corporation, limited liability company, or other similar entity formed under the laws of a foreign country to do business in the United States, by filing a document with the Secretary of State or similar office under the laws of a State or Indian Tribe.

iii. Each Reporting Company formed in 2024 and thereafter must have at least one Company Applicant and, depending upon the circumstances, may have up to two Company Applicants.

iv. FinCEN takes the position in its FAQs that "the individual who is primarily responsible for directing or controlling the filing" is a Company Applicant. This means that if an attorney drafts Articles of Organization or Articles of Incorporation or directs a paralegal or legal assistant to make the filing, the attorney is a Company Applicant.

v. In addition, the person who "directly files the document that creates or registers the company" is also a Company Applicant.

FinCEN provides the following example in its FAQs:

For example, an attorney at a law firm that offers business formation services may be primarily responsible for overseeing preparation and filing of a reporting company's incorporation documents. A paralegal at the law firm may directly file the incorporation documents at the attorney's request. Under those circumstances, the attorney and the paralegal are both company applicants for the reporting company.

b) The initial report of a Reporting Company formed on or after January 1, 2024, must include the required information under the CTA for the Company Applicant, the Reporting Company itself, and all Beneficial Owners under 31 C.F.R. § 1010.380(b)(1).

c) The final rule no longer requires domestic reporting companies created prior to the effective date, or foreign reporting companies registered prior to the effective date, to submit company applicant information. Rather they will only need to report the fact that they were created or registered prior to the effective date and the required Beneficial Ownership Information ("BOI") and reporting company information. 31 C.F.R. § 1010.380(b)(2)(iv).

d) A reporting company is not required to file an updated report for any changes to previously reported personal information about a Company Applicant.

11. Due Dates for Reports

The CTA and FinCEN established the following due dates for filing reports:

a) Domestic reporting companies created or foreign companies registered for the first time on or after January 1, 2024, will have until December 31, 2024, to file their initial report to FinCEN.

b) Companies created on or after January 1, 2024 will be required to file their initial report to FinCEN within 90 days of the date of creation or registration.

c) Companies created on or after January 1, 2025, will be required to file their initial report to FinCEN within 30 days of the date of creation or registration.

d) If there is a change in previously reported information, reporting companies must file an updated report within 30 days.

e) Finally, any inaccurate information must be corrected within 14 days of the date the company knew or should have known of the mistake.

12. Penalties

a) Under 31 U.S.C. § 5336(h) and 31 C.F.R. § 1010.380(g):

It is unlawful for any person to—

i. Willfully provide, or attempt to provide, false or fraudulent beneficial ownership information, including a false or fraudulent identifying photograph or document; or
ii. Willfully fail to report complete or updated beneficial ownership information.

b) Penalties for Reporting Violations (31 U.S.C. § 5336(h)(3)(A)):

i. Liable for a civil penalty of not more than $500 for each day that the violation continues or has not been remedied; and
ii. May be fined not more than $10,000, imprisoned for not more than 2 years, or both.

c) There are also penalties for unauthorized disclosure of CTA information under 31 U.S.C. § 5336(h)(2):

It is unlawful for any person to knowingly disclose or knowingly use the beneficial ownership information obtained by the person through a report submitted to FinCEN or a disclosure made by FinCEN.

i. Penalties for Unauthorized Disclosure or Use Violations (31 U.S.C. § 5336(h)(3)(B)):

A. Liable for a civil penalty of not more than $500 for each day that the violation continues or has not been remedied; and
B. Either (I) fined not more than $250,000, or imprisoned for not more than 5 years, or both; or (II) while violating another law of the United States or any illegal activity involving more than $100,000 in a 12-month period, shall be fined not more than $500,000, imprisoned for not more than 10 years, or both.

13. Access Regulations

a) Retention and disclosure of BOI by FinCEN under 31 U.S.C. § 5336(c).
i. Retention of Information:
A. BOI relating to each reporting company shall be maintained by FinCEN for no less than 5 years after the date on which the reporting company terminates. 31 U.S.C. § 5336(c)(1).
B. An officer or employee of the United States, State agency or financial institution may not disclose BOI information. 31 U.S.C. § 5336(c)(2)(A).

ii. Scope of disclosure by FinCEN to Federal and State Agencies:
FinCEN may disclose BOI reported only upon receipt of a request, through appropriate protocols---

A. From a federal agency engaged in national security, intelligence, or law enforcement activity, for use in furtherance of such activity; or
B. From a state, local, or tribal law enforcement agency who seeks information in a criminal or civil investigation; or from the federal government acting on behalf of a foreign government.

b) Rejection of Request under 31 U.S.C. § 5336(c)(6).

i. The Secretary of the Treasury shall reject a request not submitted on the FinCEN authored form.

ii. The Secretary of the Treasury may decline to provide information under this section upon finding that:
   A. The requesting agency has failed to meet any other requirement of this subsection;
   B. The information is being requested for an unlawful purpose; or
   C. Other good cause exists to deny the request.

14. Proposed Rulemaking

Rulemaking to Increase Transparency in Residential Real Estate.

FinCEN has issued a Notice of Proposed Rulemaking impacting certain residential real estate transfers. If adopted, FinCEN believes that the rule "would combat and deter money laundering by increasing transparency in the U.S. residential estate sector." [14] The proposed rule would require professionals involved in the closing or settlement of residential real estate transfers to report information to FinCEN.[15] The proposed rule would replace the current Residential Real Estate Geographic Targeting Order Program, which "requires title insurance companies to file reports identifying the beneficial owners of legal entities that make certain non-financed purchases of residential real estate" with a nationwide reporting requirement.[16] "The proposed rule would require businesses, including attorneys, performing specified closing or settlement functions for the non-financed sale or transfer of residential real property to an entity or trust, to collect and report information to FinCEN.[17]

FinCEN notes that the beneficial ownership information collected under this new rule, if adopted, would serve a different purpose than the information already collected under the beneficial ownership information reporting rule.[18] This information would be used to enable law enforcement to "directly tie individuals, entities, and trusts of interest to specific non-financed sales and transfers of U.S. residential real estate."[19]

Reportable transfers would include the transfer of single-family houses, townhouses, condominiums, and cooperatives, as well as buildings designed for occupancy by one to four families. Additionally, there is no threshold price for the transfer.

Accordingly, transfers of ownership in the form of a gift would need to be reported. Reportable transfers are defined broadly to include a wide variety of property owning vehicles, including but are not limited to LLCs, corporations, partnerships and trusts. [20] Notably, FinCEN has published a list of exceptions for highly regulated types of entities.

Finally, the Real Estate Report would need to be filed within 30 days after the date of the property's transfer and the reporting party would need to keep a copy of the report for a period of five years, along with a form signed by the transferee verifying the BOI is correct.

We will provide updates on this rule if it is adopted by FinCEN.

15. Court Challenges to the CTA

a) On November 15, 2022, the National Small Business Association (NSBA) and a small business owner (Winkles) filed a lawsuit in the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Alabama challenging the Beneficial Ownership Information Reporting (BOIR) Rule of the CTA. Nat'l Small Bus. United v. Yellen, No. 5:22-CV-1448-LCB, 2024 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 36205 (N.D. Ala. Mar. 1, 2024). The plaintiffs sought an immediate injunction against implementation of the BOIR Rule of the CTA.

b) On March 1, 2024 the federal district court entered a declaratory judgement ruling that:
   i. The BOIR Rule of the CTA was unconstitutional because the legislation cannot be justified as an exercise of Congress' enumerated powers.
   ii. As a result the government is not currently enforcing the CTA against the plaintiffs.
   iii. Having concluded that Congress exceeded its enumerated powers in enacting the CTA, the court did not address the constitutionality of the Act under the First, Fourth, an Fifth Amendments to the U.S. Constitution.

c) Consequences of this case
   i. Application of the Court Decision. Since the court did not issue a national injunction, the CTA's BOIR Rule should remain in effect for all other reporting companies other than the plaintiffs.

d) Other pending litigation
   i. Similar Lawsuit. Robert J. Gargasz v. Yellen, No.1:23-cv-02468 (N.D. Ohio Dec. 29, 2023) (lawsuit seeking a nationwide injunction against enforcement of the CTA) (no updates as of July 25).

16. Gentry Locke's Practice Tips

a) Organization for dealing with the CTA is half the battle. Below are some organizational steps Gentry Locke has taken in dealing with the CTA:

i. Send out letters informing clients about the CTA;

ii. Create an inbox for questions specific to the Act

iii. Create a spreadsheet to track the kinds of questions that have been sent and when a response was given;

iv. Review client organizational documents before answering questions and ensure information is up to date.

v. Ensure that when new entities are formed, the client is notified in writing of the filing obligations of the CTA

vi. Consider sending reminder notices to clients in late 2024.

b) The FinCEN web site has a FAQ and a Small Entity Compliance Guide which answers many common questions regarding the CTA and filing obligations.

c) We have found that most clients are able to navigate the FinCEN BOI filing system fairly easily and have not had significant issues with the system. It is possible that this could change later this year as the system could be overwhelmed when many existing companies will file.

All in the Family Business:
Shareholder Oppression Issues in Closely-Held Corporations

J. Scott Sexton
Scott A. Stephenson
Michael V. Moro

A. We often think of "corporations" as large, soulless entities with stock traded publicly on the exchanges. In our minds, these entities are driven solely by a profit motive, largely bereft of emotions other than greed that theoretically serves the interests of all owners.

B. In fact, many businesses are "closely-held"—meaning that their ownership is concentrated among just a few private owners—who are often family members. These entities are typically much smaller, but there are glaring exceptions. See, e.g., Cargill, Inc.[1] It is not uncommon for these entities to operate on a hybrid profit motive mixed with family or founder ethos, emotions, and values that are not exclusively profit-oriented.

C. Closely-held businesses are also not necessarily structured in one manner. A business might be organized as a limited liability company ("LLC"), some form of partnership, or a traditional corporation.

D. Multiple generations of family members are often involved in these closely-held businesses, which can and do often contain differing branches of the same original founding family.

E. Different rights, duties, and obligations are associated with or imposed on these owners, depending on the structure of the business. These materials focus on the context of closely-held corporations, but many of the concepts may apply equally to other business forms, like LLCs, which can often be similarly structured. See, e.g., Remora Invs., L.L.C. v. Orr, 277 Va. 316, 321-22, 673 S.E.2d 845, 847 (2009) (analogizing duties in the LLC context to those in the corporate context).

F. In large, publicly-traded corporations, shareholders do not owe each other fiduciary duties. And as a general rule, the fiduciaries in control of such corporations (directors, officers) generally owe duties (e.g., duties of loyalty and care) to the corporation, not its individual shareholders. American General Ins. Co. v. Equitable General Corp., 493 F. Supp. 721, 741 (E.D. Va. 1980) (applying Virginia law, and explaining that "the Virginia common law duty owed to the shareholders . . . by its directors was not a fiduciary duty inuring to each shareholder in his individual dealings with [the corporation], but was rather a duty attaching only to dealings between the officers and directors of [the corporation] and the shareholders as a class").

G. The rationale behind this principle is that what may be in the best interest of one shareholder is not necessarily synonymous with what is in the best interest of the corporation as a whole. Accordingly, imposing duties on fiduciaries to act in the best interests of both the corporation and its individual shareholders could place them in an untenable position.

H. The world of closely-held corporations is different, because the shareholders can often wear several "hats." They are typically not just passive owners, but are also directors, officers, and/or employees of the corporation. Accordingly, the law imposes a balancing act on such individuals:

    1. On one hand, majority stockholders have rights that are entitled to protection. They have the right to retain their stock, to control the management of the corporation, and to act together to accomplish their legitimate aims. Glass v. Glass, 228 Va. 39, 53-54, 321 S.E.2d 69, 78 (1984); accord Fein v. Lanston Monotype Mach. Co., 196 Va. 753, 766, 85 S.E.2d 353, 360 (1955) ("the holders of the majority of the shares of a corporation have the right and the power, by the election of directors and by the vote of their stock, to determine the policy of their corporation and to manage and control its action").

    2. On the other hand, the "minority" shareholder(s) in closely-held corporations are owed a base duty of fair-dealing and fair play by those in control—the "majority" shareholder(s). See Giannotti v. Hamway, 239 Va. 14, 23, 387 S.E.2d 725, 730 (1990); White v. Perkins, 213 Va. 129, 134, 189 S.E.2d 315, 320 (1972).

I. The duty is breached in instances when those in control—i.e., the "majority"—attempt to "squeeze" or "freeze" out the "minority":

    1. The term "squeeze-out" means the use of strategic position, inside information, powers of control, or the utilization of some legal device or technique by some of the owners or participants in a business, to eliminate one or more of the owners or participants from the enterprise. Colgate v. Disthene Group, Inc., 85 Va. Cir. 286, 295 n.9 (Buckingham County, 2012) (quoting Robert B. Thompson, O'Neal and Thompson's Oppression of Minority Shareholders and LLC Members § 1:1 (rev. 2d ed. 2012)).

    2. A "partial squeeze-out" is an action which reduces the participation or powers of a group of participants in the business, diminishes their claims on earnings or assets, or otherwise deprives them of business income or advantages to which they are entitled. A squeeze-out normally does not contemplate fair payment to the "squeezees" for the interests, rights, or powers which they lose. Id.

    3. One of the most commonly used "squeeze" techniques is to withhold dividends. By declaring no dividends at all or keeping dividend payments low, majority shareholders may force a minority shareholder to sell their minority interest at considerably less than actual value. Colgate, 85 Va. Cir. at 296 (citing O'Neal and Thompson, §§ 1:3, 3.4).

4. A similar example is the abrupt removal of a minority shareholder from positions of employment and management. Jones, Va. Cir. at 180 (citing O'Neal and Thompson at § 3:06). Many times closely-held companies distribute substantial earnings by salary paid to owner-employees. Termination of such employment can be tantamount to a financial squeeze out.

5. In many instances, a shareholder who also holds a directorship and the chief executive position in a corporation runs the business in a one-person, autocratic manner that may be very helpful in building the business, but less so once the business is established. Generation changes in management can generate confrontations when a business leader in a subsequent generation seeks to "rule" in the same manner as the original founders. We have found that the tolerance for disregard of corporate formalities diminishes substantially with the transition from a founding owner to the subsequent generation. However, ignoring customary corporate procedures and documentation can lead to conflicts with other strong-minded personalities among the shareholders and set the stage for a squeeze-play. Colgate, 85 Va. Cir. at 295 (quoting O'Neal and Thompson at § 2:7).

6. A classic example is when the "oppressor(s)" cut off the flow of income for the minority shareholder or refuse to declare dividends, while at the same time maintaining their stream of income through continued salaries or creation of new salaries. Jones v. A. Town Smoke House & Catering Inc., 106 Va. Cir. 168, 180 (City of Waynesboro, 2020) (citing O'Neal and Thompson at § 3:2).

7. In another commonly-used squeeze-out technique, majority shareholders siphon off corporate wealth by causing a corporation to pay its majority shareholders, and perhaps members of their immediate family or other relatives, high compensation for services rendered as directors, officers or employees. Instead of treating all of the stock alike, and distributing the profits fairly and proportionately by way of dividends, the majority first elect themselves directors, then as directors elect themselves officers, and then distribute among themselves a substantial part of the profits in the way of salaries, additional compensation and other devices. Colgate, 85 Va. Cir. at 304 (quoting O'Neal and Thompson, § 3:7).

J. Virginia law (and the law of all states in the United States) labels this type of conduct as "oppression," see Virginia Code § 13.1-747(A)(1)(b), which is more generally defined as action "by corporate managers toward stockholders which departs from the standards of fair dealing and violates the principles of fair play on which persons who entrust their funds to a corporation are entitled to rely." Giannotti, 239 Va. at 23, 387 S.E.2d at 730; White, 213 Va. at 134, 189 S.E.2d at 320. As you would expect, the terms "fair dealing" and "fair play" are subject to widely different interpretations.

K. These kinds of scenarios can arise in various ways within family-owned and operated businesses.[2] For example:

1. It is not uncommon for co-owner siblings to "fall-out." If they cannot get along as family members, the odds of them successfully agreeing on how to run the business are extraordinarily slim. This can occur regardless of the precise ownership percentages held by each person in the conflict. In some instance, the founder (father or mother is typical) may have actually structured the ownership such that one sibling owns a controlling interest. However, even if the ownership interests are equal, minority oppression can still be claimed based on the notion that the target owner has teamed up with other similarly-minded owners to form a majority "block" of interests. If that "block" takes action to consolidate control and push the other out of the business, one can expect similar allegations and claims to arise—just as if the targeted owner held an individual majority interest.

2. It is also not uncommon for two branches of a family to share ownership of a business (e.g., two siblings form a company) and subsequently one branch of the family tries to consolidate control of the business in its "faction," and minimize the control or rights of the other side.

L. Oppression cases can also arise from "succession" issues within families and family-owned businesses.

1. "Death brings out the worst in some people." Siblings from the founder generation may start a business built on filial affection and shared ambitions, only to be followed by subsequent family members with whom such affections may not run nearly so deep. Many times that first generation is very attached to the business they built (rightfully so), and they desire to continue it as a going concern into future generations. However, those future generations may have completely different goals and preferences—and they may resent being forced into a permanent financial entanglement with other family members. Because these family members can be inclined to "hold their tongues" during the lifetime of the founder(s), death can often bring big conflicts because it removes the disincentives for open dispute.

2. By the time that this happens, however, the founder(s) likely have involved at least some of their children in the business, granting select members of this "Second Generation" jobs, management responsibilities, officer roles, ownership, etc. See, e.g., Jordon v. Bowman Apple Prods. Co., 728 F. Supp. 409, 411-12 (W.D. Va. 1990).

3. Unfortunately, it is rare for the Second Generation to get along as well as members of the first or "Founding" generation. A company built on strong familial sentiments and bonds of cooperation and trust may find itself transitioning from years of "peace, growth, and prosperity" to years of conflict and litigation.

[2] The same concepts can apply equally in business interests owned by persons who are not family members.

4. These conflicts can often simmer just below the surface for years, with inwardly-competing family members jockeying for position and power. In this phase, it is not uncommon to see passive aggressive relationships marred by secrecy and the formation of factions. When such owners begin recruiting other (perhaps less involved) family owners to their cause, litigation is never far away. Ultimately, the tensions boil over, someone gets fired, someone gets excluded from choice projects, someone is set up to fail, someone refuses to honor corporate authority, etc. That is when lawsuits happen.

5. Sadly, there is often a competency gap between the founding generation and subsequent generations. And ironically, sometimes this can be traced directly back to the actions and decisions of the founding generation. Regardless of who caused what, it is possible that other owners may recognize an "anointed" successor's inherent weaknesses and flaws, while the patron of the successor (often a parent) is blind to such shortcomings. Other owners may take actions that they believe are fulling aligned with the best interests of the company only to then be confronted with an "oppression" lawsuit.

6. All of these scenarios are further exaggerated if there is a bleed-over of "issues" between the family and the business. Most experts in the field agree that family-owned businesses should not be used to solve family problems. Most often the result is that both the family and the business will suffer in the long run. Additionally, it is often difficult for the subsequent generations to perceive the boundaries between family and business. Family slights can bloom into business litigation.

M. The consequences of a misstep can be severe.

1. If oppressive conduct is found, the remedy can be drastic: dissolution. The judicial dissolution statute, found in § 13.1-747 of the Virginia Stock Corporation Act, provides that the circuit court, in the exercise of its equitable authority, "may dissolve a corporation" when a shareholder establishes that "the directors or those in control of the corporation have acted, are acting, or will act in a manner that is illegal, oppressive, or fraudulent[.]" Va. Code § 13.1-747(A)(1)(b) (emphasis added). The only remedy available under this statute is the death penalty for the corporation.[3] In practice, we have found that the vast majority of such claims are designed to force a buyout of the minority owner's interests – and that is what typically happens at some point in the grueling process. However, in order to force that result, most aggrieved shareholders must ostensibly "seek" dissolution (which is often not in anyone's real best interests).

2. The judicial dissolution statute is remedial and intended to protect the rights of corporate stockholders—particularly minority owners. Baylor v. Beverly Book Co., 216 Va. 22, 24, 216 S.E.2d 18, 19 (1975).

[3] Courts in many other states have attempted to soften the impact of a finding of oppression by interpreting the authorizing statute as allowing "lesser included" equitable remedies such as forced buyout, injunctive relief, reinstatement, etc. However, Virginia has not recognized these as possible remedies due to the plain language of the statute.

3. An aggrieved shareholder may also file a derivative action on behalf of the company against the "oppressor" officers and directors for breach of fiduciary duty. See Virginia Code § 13.1-672.1. In contrast to claims of "oppression," which are claims based on harm to the individual shareholder, a derivative action is brought to remedy harms to the corporation, not those of any individual shareholder. Accordingly, derivative actions seek damages and the removal of those in authority on behalf of the corporation.

4. The distinction between direct and derivative claims generally turns on: (1) who suffered the alleged harm (the corporation or the suing stockholders, individually); and (2) who would receive benefit of any recovery or other remedy (the corporation or the stockholders, individually). See Remora Invs., 277 Va. at 323-24, 673 S.E.2d at 848 (approving but not adopting the analysis in Tooley v. Donaldson, Lufkin, & Jenrette, Inc., 845 A.2d 1031 (Del. 2004)).

5. The distinction between the two types of claims is not always clear, and they can go hand-in-hand. Typically, a shareholder alleging oppressive conduct through the acts of a corporation's officers and/or directors would also allege that such acts, taken by the corporation, had no legitimate business purpose other than to harm the minority shareholder, and thus, were breaches of the duties of loyalty and care owed to the corporation and harmful to the corporation as well.

6. One of the challenges with oppression claims is their potential scope. "Oppression" is not defined by what it is, but rather by what it is not—a lack of "fair dealing" and "fair play." Giannotti, 239 Va. at 23, 387 S.E.2d at 730; White, 213 Va. at 134, 189 S.E.2d at 320. And, those terms are incredibly vague. As a result, claims for oppression can potentially include a wide range of conduct that can span many years. This has the effect of vastly increasing the litigation costs for such disputes that often take the opportunity to reach back in years to prior perceived injustices.

7. Once an "oppression" lawsuit is filed, the strain on family relationship can be profound and lasting. It is extremely toxic for family members to be recruiting allies among other family members, who feel forced to "pick sides."

N. Estate disputes can also bleed into the corporate context. For instance:

   1. The patriarch of the family and the head of the family business dies. Toward the end of his life, he favored one sibling over another in both the business and in his will.

   2. The disfavored and now-disgruntled sibling may attempt to claim that the "golden child" poisoned the patriarch against him/her to remove any testamentary support that he/she may have received under the will to further marginalize him/her in the business.

   3. Thus, a messy corporate dispute between siblings gets even messier when estate issues like testamentary capacity and undue influence get put into the mix.

4. A similar cross-section can happen when a shareholder/family member is also an employee of the business. Here again, good lawyering can transform a claim for wrongful discharge into minority oppression.

5. It's not just business. It's personal. While seemingly "corporate" litigation, these cases are often deeply personal, and can feel more like a divorce proceeding. Suppressed or unresolved relationship issues can be brought to the forefront, and there is frequently palpable bitterness and animosity between parties.

O. So how can families/family businesses prevent these kinds of disputes?

1. Ideally, all family-owned businesses should separate family issues from business issues. Unfortunately, this requires extraordinary discipline on the part of the founding generation that is rarely seen. Work spent keeping family and business issues separate lays the foundation for a more successful transition of ownership and control.

2. Founding members must address transition/succession issues with honesty and direct communication if they hope to successfully transition the family business as a going concern. Often this means being honest with themselves. For example, a parent may have harbored unrealistically substantial ambitions for a particular child. Others may see that child's weaknesses far more clearly than the parent. An atmosphere of honesty (with self and other) is important to bridge this possible divide. The bottom line is management and ownership decisions must be made realistically, fairly, and openly. If there are disappointments to be experienced, it is best that those come while the founding generation is still involved.

    i. Those in control should evaluate the costs and benefits of potential successors with regard to various positions in the business.

    ii. To the extent family members are employees, their roles should be clearly delineated, and a "chain of command" put into place in which there is a final decisionmaker—i.e., a chief executive officer.

    iii. Make sure there is a disinterested or independent (to the extent possible) "tie-breaker" when it comes to board decisions, to prevent potential deadlock in management and ownership.

    iv. Ensure that board or management decisions are largely, if not entirely, accomplished by majority vote—to prevent any single decision-maker wielding unfettered "veto" power or entrenching themselves.

    v. All of these aims can be accomplished through careful planning and drafting of the governing corporate documents. However, no document can fully protect a business or its owners if any owner is immovable or recalcitrant.

3. Remember that legal duties arises from particular roles in the corporate context. They do not extend to all areas of life. Family members do not owe each other a legal duty in every context in which they find themselves simply because they are related. Accordingly, clearly distinguish between corporate and personal transactions, and ensure that timing is not an issue. For example, a change in personal estate documents that comes contemporaneously with corporate changes raises more suspicion.

4. In the event there is a fall-out between shareholders and there is simply no way to resurrect the relationship, a buyout of the dissenter's shares can preclude percolating disputes from developing into litigation. Unfortunately, valuing such interests in a manner that is acceptable to all sides is practically impossible unless a precise formula and methodology has been specified in the governing documents.

    i. The corporate documents can be drawn-up to provide a framework for any purchase. But this is often an area of draftsmanship that is rushed through – with a resulting vague or ambiguous governing document that only aggravates the problem when it is time to refer to such terms in real life. However, there are a few key areas where proper language in the governing document can really make a difference.

    ii. Fair Value or Fair Market Value? Do you know the difference? They both sound "fair," but they result in vastly different outcomes.

        a. "Fair Value" does not take into account common discounts for marketability or control. In effect, it is a valuation based on the total asset value of the company multiplied by the complaining party's ownership percentage.

        b. "Fair Market Value," by contrast, reflects the price at which the shares would change hands between a willing buyer and a willing seller, with neither under a compulsion to engage in the transaction. This standard allows for discounts of marketability and control, and can more appropriately take into account other factors.

    iii. But despite the vast differences in outcome between these two standards of methodology, it is remarkable how many times we see corporate documents where the terms "fair value" are used rather than "fair market value." There are places where this is entirely appropriate—such as in dissenter rights matters. However, in the vast majority of circumstances (including voluntary or forced buyouts in most circumstances that do not give rise to dissenters' rights), the governing documents should specify a purchase based on fair market value. Otherwise, the purchaser is almost certain to overpay for the interests.

    iv. Unfortunately, under the statutory language of the shareholder oppression statute in Virginia, the default methodology is for "Fair Value" rather than "Fair Market Value." If oppression is found, and judicial dissolution is warranted under Virginia Code § 13.1-747, "the corporation may elect or, if it fails to elect, one or more shareholders may elect to purchase all shares owned by the petitioning shareholder at the fair value of the shares." Va. Code § 13.1-749.1.

v. But, miraculously, the Code defines "fair value" in this context as if it were "fair market value."

vi. Under the default statutory provisions, "Fair value" can be determined by the agreement of the parties, but if they cannot agree, it is determined by the circuit court upon petition. See Va. Code § 13.1-749.1(C)-(D).

vii. Virginia Code § 13.1-749.1(D) reveals that its drafters were likely not focused on the meaning of the terms "Fair Value" when they drafted 13.1-749(C)-(D) because the Code further specifies that in determining fair value, the court must consider "all relevant facts and circumstances," including:

a. the petitioner's minority status;

b. the marketability of the petitioner's shares;

c. the relevant terms of any shareholders' agreement; and

d. if the court finds that the value of the corporation has been diminished by the wrongful conduct of controlling shareholders, the petitioner's proportionate claim for any compensable corporate injury.

In other words, the Code defines "fair value" as if it were "fair market value."

viii. However, the court considers these factors "unless the court determines it would be unjust or inequitable to do so." Va. Code § 13.1-749.1(D) (emphasis added).

ix. Here, either the drafters either did not appreciate that "Fair Value" does not include discounts for marketability and control, or they adopted a hybrid methodology that combines aspects of both standards—because "Fair Value" does not include marketability and control discounts.[4]

x. Under the hybrid theory, we would treat Virginia's statutory "fair value" as "fair market value"—subject to judicial modification, which is free to treat application of marketability and control discounts as discretionary after considering the totality of the circumstances. Jones, 106 Va. Cir. at 176.

[4] The general rule in other jurisdictions is to reject marketability discounts when determining fair value, absent "extraordinary circumstances." Jones, 106 Va. Cir. at 178 (citing cases).

xi. Given all of these moving parts—and considering the high significance and impact of these distinctions—we recommend including terms in the Articles of Incorporation and Shareholder Agreement, specifying "Fair Market Value" as the standard for any transfer of shares by or between a shareholder and the company or other shareholders, including in circumstances presented in Virginia Code § 13.1-749.1.

xii. In addition to having the Articles and Shareholder Agreement specify Fair Market Value as the standard for all transfers by or among shareholders or the company, it is also advisable to spend time and attention to adding even more specificity about how such values will be produced. The best practice is to have the company conduct regular business valuations (e.g., every three years) and specify that the latest of such valuations shall govern any transfers among shareholders or between shareholders and the company. Even if the Court allows the petitioning shareholder to present his/her own appraisal, the methodology and results should be judged against the official valuation maintained by the company.

P. If litigation arises, the primary defense to oppression claims is the business judgment rule.

1. The business judgment rule is a common law principle that ordinarily insulates board of directors' decisions from judicial interference. Colgate, 85 Va. Cir. at 293.

2. "Generally, decisions of a corporate board of directors are protected by the business judgment doctrine, as courts are reluctant to second-guess the judgment of businesses lest they subject an unlimited number of business decisions to judicial scrutiny." O'Brien v. Midgett, 96 Va. Cir. 177, 185 (Virginia Beach, 2017).

3. The Virginia Stock Corporation Act has codified the business judgment rule in Virginia Code § 13.1-690, which states, in pertinent part, that "[a] director shall discharge his duties as a director, including his duties as a member of a committee, in accordance with his good faith business judgment of the best interests of the corporation."

4. Further, "[a] director is not liable for any action taken as a director, or any failure to take any action, if he performed the duties of his office in compliance with this section" and "[a] person alleging a violation of this section has the burden of proving the violation." Va. Code § 13.1-690(C)-(D) (emphasis added).

5. The business judgment rule does not abrogate common law fiduciary duties, such as care and loyalty. See Willard v. Moneta Building Supply, Inc., 258 Va. 140, 151, 515 S.E.2d 277 (1999). Rather, it sets the standard by which to discharge those duties. If duties are discharged in accordance with the statute, Section 13.1-690(C) provides a "safe harbor" from liability for those actions. Id.

6. Those in control "are presumed to have acted properly and in good faith in the exercise of their business judgment . . . and are called to account for their actions only when they are shown to have engaged in self-dealing or fraud, or have acted in bad faith." Giannotti, 239 Va. at 24, 387 S.E.2d at 731.

7. The essential elements of the business judgment rule are: (1) the absence of personal interest or self-dealing, (2) an informed decision, which reflects a reasonable effort (subject to permitted reliance upon the advice of others) to become familiar with the relevant and available facts as well as an actual decision, (3) a reasonable belief that the decision serves the interests of the corporation, and (4) good faith. The presence of improper motives forecloses a finding that the action was taken in good faith. Colgate, 85 Va. Cir. at 293.

8. The rule functions within a burden shifting framework. Those in control "are presumed to have acted properly and in good faith in the exercise of their business judgment." Giannotti, 239 Va. at 24, 387 S.E.2d at 731. The shareholder must demonstrate that "a director had an interest in the transaction at issue[.]" Id. Then, "the burden shifts to the director to prove that the transaction was fair and reasonable to the corporation." Id.

Q. Other practice tips to avoid litigation altogether:

1. Up front work. When forming a corporation or LLC for business clients, do not overlook mechanisms to deal with future disputes among owners. It is well worth the attention on the front end, and, once the bloom leaves the rose, it is hard to get owners to unanimously agree to anything.

2. Arbitration? Many Circuit Courts are unfamiliar with complicated business dispute issues. Moreover, disputes among closely held business owners can be public, nasty, and extraordinarily expensive. Consider adding an arbitration clause for such disputes (or for all disputes). If you do this, spend real effort on the arbitration clause. You may also want to include a baseball arbitration provision to prevent deadlock (another ground for dissolution). If your client chooses to opt for an arbitration clause in the Shareholder Agreement, consider limiting discovery as well (it can be incredibly expensive in oppression lawsuits given the potential breadth of the claims).

3. Counseling business clients dealing with "next" generation transition issues. It is not uncommon for founding business owners to tolerate bad behavior from family member employees. This is not good for the business, its owners, or the other employees.

    i. Businesses should apply the same standards of conduct to owners (family members) and other employees.

    ii. Businesses should not tolerate bad behavior from owners. It will not end when the founders exit the organization. Odds are that it will only get worse.

    iii. Consider hiring professionals to assist with business transitions. These days there are business psychologists and other professionals who do nothing but work with companies in the process of transitioning management from one generation to the next. Their services are expensive, but not nearly as expensive as litigation among owners.

4. Consider strong restrictions on transfer in a family owned business. If you do restrict transferability, do it with precise and unambiguous language. The benefits include:

   i. Discouraging impetuous decisions about departures.

   ii. Reducing the buyout price in the event of a intransigent dispute.

   iii. Possibly assisting with divorce planning. Many disputes indirectly stem from marital discord with an owner. If you want to protect owners from potential future marital property claims, do it up front. In some instances, we have recommended a Shareholder Agreement requirement that owners actively working in the business must have a prenuptial or post-nuptial agreement protecting the ownership interests.

5. Jury trial? Consider waiving jury trials in the Shareholder Agreement.

6. Define the duties owed. As noted previously, it is difficult to pin down exactly what constitutes "fair play" and "fair dealing"—and even when these are adequately defined in the Code, there is always the argument that the Code is supplemented by principles of common law. In light of these variables, consider defining precisely what is required by these terms. This can (and should) include incorporation of uncodified common law. We suggest that such vague references be eliminated by agreement whenever possible.

7. Clear valuation standards. Clarity discourages litigation. We recommend that you incorporate precise valuation standards and exclude unpredictable valuation standards. For example, instead of just referring to the "fair market value" standard, include a description of what that will include (e.g., control and marketability discounts). If there are substantial restrictions on transfer, consider specifying the amount of the discounts.

8. Financing provisions. By Agreement, the shareholders can specify that buyouts by the company or other shareholders will be seller-financed at a particular interest rate for a particular term. It is better to agree on these things before there is a dispute.

9. Conduct regular appraisals. These help with inheritance taxes and departures.

10. Attorneys' fees. Consider waiver of attorneys' fees in all litigation involving owners.

11. Liability insurance. Many (or most, probably) family-owned businesses have a Directors and Officers (or Errors and Omissions) insurance policy that specifically excludes claims by family members—even when the only persons who could potentially bring a claim are family members. Insurance companies will negotiate on this term. Try to get insurance that does not include family exclusions. An alternative form that insurance companies use is the "major shareholder exclusion" which typically rejects coverage for owners of a certain percentage interest (e.g., 10% or more). That too can be negotiated.

On Being Between Rocks and Hard Places: An Update on the Fast-Changing and Sometimes Conflicting Legal Demands on Employers in Religious Cases

By: Todd Leeson and Noah Sullivan[1]

I. Anti-Discrimination Laws and Recent Decisions on Religious and Transgender Issues

A. Title VII and the VHRA

1. Title VII of the Civil Rights Act

- "It shall be an unlawful employment practice for an employer to fail or refuse to hire or to discharge any individual, or otherwise to discriminate against any individual with respect to his compensation, terms, conditions, or privileges of employment, because of such individual's race, color, religion, sex, or national origin;" 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2(a)(1).

2. Virginia Human Rights Act – Virginia Code § 2.2-3905

- "It is an unlawful discriminatory practice for:
An employer to [f]ail or refuse to hire, discharge, or otherwise discriminate against any individual with respect to such individual's compensation, terms, conditions, or privileges of employment because of such individual's race, color, religion, sex, sexual orientation, gender identity, marital status, pregnancy, childbirth or related medical conditions including lactation, age, military status, disability, or national origin;" VA. CODE ANN. § 2.2-3905(B)(1)(a).
- "'Religion' includes any outward expression of religious faith, including adherence to religious dressing and grooming practices and the carrying or display of religious items or symbols." VA. CODE ANN. § 2.2-3901(E).

B. 303 Creative v. Elenis, 600 U.S. 570 (2023).

1. Facts

- The plaintiff sought to enjoin Colorado from enforcing the Colorado Anti-Discrimination Act ("CADA") against her if she refused to create a website for same-sex weddings. Id. at 580–81.
- The plaintiff stipulated that she would not discriminate against same-sex couples for the design of other websites, but that her beliefs precluded her from making websites celebrating same-sex marriage. Id. at 582.

2. Lower Courts

- The district court and Tenth Circuit held that the plaintiff was not entitled to an injunction. 303 Creative LLC v. Elenis, 405 F. Supp. 3d 907, 912 (D. Colo. 2019); 303 Creative LLC v. Elenis, 6 F.4th 1160, 1168 (10th Cir. 2021).
- The district court simply dismissed for lack of standing. Elenis, 405 F. Supp. 3d at 911.
- The Tenth Circuit found standing, but held that Colorado satisfied strict scrutiny because it had a compelling governmental interest in ensuring equal access to publicly available services and there was no less restrictive option aside from coercing her to provide her unique services. Elenis, 6 F.4th at 1181–82.

3. Colorado's Compulsion of Speech

- The Supreme Court stated that the CADA, as applied under the Tenth Circuit's reasoning, forced the plaintiff either to speak the government's preferred message or face sanctions. Elenis, 600 U.S. at 589.
- The court relied on the fact that the CADA could require compulsory attendance of remedial training, filing compliance reports, and paying monetary fines. Id.
- The court also relied on past precedents that had held that public accommodations laws could not be used to deny speakers the right to choose their own message, lest they be conscripted to speak the government's message anytime someone of a protected class was involved. Id. at 592.

- The Court also rejected Colorado's contention that the plaintiff was discriminating on the basis of a protected class instead of beliefs. The court looked to the parties' stipulations and found that the plaintiff would agree to create websites for individuals regardless of sexuality, just not websites celebrating same-sex marriage. Id. at 594–95.

C. Kennedy v. Bremerton, 597 U.S. 507 (2022).

1. Facts

- Kennedy, an assistant coach for a high school football team, had engaged in prayers with students on the field following football games. Id. at 514–15.
- At other times he prayed alone on the field. Kennedy also engaged in pregame and postgame prayers in the locker room following some games. The students who joined him did so voluntarily. Id. at 515.
- No one had complained about these practices for over seven years. Id.
- After the school district learned of his actions, the district sent Kennedy a letter instructing him to avoid any motivational talks with students that included religious expression and to refrain from engaging in, supervising, or encouraging student prayers. Id. at 516.
- After the letter, Kennedy ended the tradition of offering locker room prayers and ceased incorporating religious expression or prayers in motivational talks. Id.
- After requesting, and being subsequently denied, permission to continue his midfield prayers alone, Kennedy continued the practice while his students were engaged in other postgame activities. Id. at 517–18.
- The school district placed him on administrative leave and his evaluation advised against rehiring him, despite years of positive evaluations. Id. at 519–20.

2. Lower Court Rulings

- The district court and the Ninth Circuit held that Kennedy's free speech and free exercise rights had not been violated. Kennedy v. Bremerton Sch. Dist., 443 F. Supp. 3d 1223, 1240 (W.D. Wash. 2020); Kennedy v. Bremerton Sch. Dist., 991 F.3d 1004, 1019–21 (9th Cir. 2021).
- Both courts found that the speech was attributable to his position as a coach and, therefore, was government speech. Kennedy, 443 F. Supp. 3d at 1237; Kennedy, 991 F.3d at 1016.
- Both courts also found that, even if the prayers were speech as a private citizen, there would be no free exercise or free expression violations because the school district had a compelling interest in avoiding an violation of the establishment clause. Kennedy, 443 F. Supp. 3d at 1240; Kennedy, 991 F.3d at 1022–23.

3. Supreme Court Finds a Violation of Free Exercise and Speech Rights

- Speech Claims
  - The Court stated that the principal question in determining whether speech is government speech is whether it is ordinarily within the scope of an employee's duties. Kennedy, 597 U.S. at 529.
  - The Court then stated that Kennedy was not speaking as a government employee because the speech was not attributable to his ordinary job duties and he was explicitly given time for personal secular activities following a game. Id. at 529–30.
  - The Court stated that just because Kennedy chose to use this time for a religious activity, his speech was not transformed into government speech. Id. at 531.
- Free Exercise Claim
  - The Court held that the free exercise violation was clear because the school board had specifically targeted the practice for fear of the repercussions of Kennedy's religious expression. Thus, religion was the entire point of the disciplinary actions against Kennedy. Id. at 526–27.

- Failed Establishment Clause Defense
  - The Court also stated that there was no establishment clause violation because the lower courts failed to interpret the establishment clause with reference to historical practices and understandings which were being used in place of the Lemon and endorsement tests. Id. at 534–36.
    - In a nutshell, the Lemon test had previously required three prongs for a government action to be valid under the establishment clause: (1) a secular purpose; (2) the action must not have had the effect of advancing or inhibiting religion; and (3) the action could not create an excessive entanglement between the government and religion. See Lemon v. Kurtzman, 403 U.S. 602 (1971).
    - The endorsement test focuses on whether the government has endorsed or disapproved a particular religion. This test was promulgated by Justice O'Connor in her concurring opinion in Lynch v. Donnely. See Lynch v. Donnely, 465 U.S. 668 (1984) (O'Connor, J., concurring).
  - The Court also rejected the district's argument that Kennedy's conduct was coercive. Kennedy, 597 U.S. at 536–37.
  - The Court stated that learning to tolerate religious displays was part of living in a pluralistic society and that the district never raised any coercion concerns in its letters to Kennedy or in the courts below. Id. at 538.
  - The court also noted in dicta that there was no rationale shown for why one clause of the First Amendment should be read to trump another and that there was not even a showing that the clauses were in conflict. Id. at 542–43.

D. Bostock v. Clayton Cnty., 590 U.S. 644 (2020).

1. Facts

- There were multiple cases consolidated in which employees alleged that they were fired on the basis of their sexual orientation. Id. at 652–54.

2. Holding and Reasoning

- The Supreme Court recognized that "sex" discrimination under Title VII includes discrimination based on sexual orientation or gender identity. Id. at 661.
- The court reasoned that discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation equated to sex-based discrimination because if an employer had two employees who were attracted to men and the only difference between them was that one employee was a man and the other a woman, then firing the man on such grounds equated to discriminating against him based on sex. Id. at 660.

3. Fourth Circuit Applications

- Virginia Federal District Courts have applied Bostock in several sexual orientation and gender identity cases. The courts have also often cited to the fact that only but-for causation is required to establish discrimination. Flores v. Va. Dep't of Corr., 2021 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 31857 (W.D. Va. 2021) (recognizing that employers cannot discriminate based on homosexuality or transgenderism and that only but-for causation is required to establish such discrimination); Patterson v. Va. Dep't of Corr., 2024 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 72197 (E.D. Va. 2024).

E. Groff v. Dejoy, 600 U.S. 447 (2023).

1. Facts

- Groff was a mail carrier for the United States Postal Service who refused to work on Sundays based on his religious beliefs. Id. at 454.

- For years he had managed to avoid working on Sundays by moving to a more rural area that did not require Sunday deliveries. Id.
- Eventually the United States Postal Service entered into an agreement with Amazon for Sunday deliveries that extended even to the rural area where Groff worked. Id. at 455.
- Groff refused to work on Sundays forcing other employees, including a post master (who typically was not responsible for making deliveries) deliver mail on Sundays. Id.
- Groff faced progressive discipline for his refusal to work on Sundays, which eventually led to his resignation. He then sued under Title VII alleging that his religious belief could have been accommodated. Id.

2. Lower Courts

- The district court granted summary judgment to USPS and the third circuit affirmed. Groff v. Dejoy, 2021 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 66174, 37 (E.D. Pa. 2021); Groff v. Dejoy, 35 F.4th 162, 176 (3d Cir. 2022).
- The lower courts relied on the "more than a de minimis cost" standard and found that accommodating Groff's religion would have imposed an undue hardship. Groff, 2021 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 66174 at 31; Groff, 35 F.4th at 174.

3. The New Standard

- The Court stated that the de minimis standard (in effect since 1977) was not the standard for Title VII undue hardship determinations. Instead an employer must show that the burden of granting an accommodation would result in substantial increased costs in relation to the conduct of its particular business. Groff, 600 U.S. at 468.
- The Court also stated that employee animosity to a particular religion, religion in general, or the notion of accommodating religious practice cannot be considered undue hardship. Id. at 472.

- Context and facts will be critical in each case—employers should engage in interactive process with employee to evaluate whether it can accommodate.

F. Implications from these Decisions

- The Supreme Courts of both the United States and Virginia have signaled a new age of deference to religious rights.
- Because of this new found deference, it is likely that religious discrimination claims will continue to increase.
- In 2021, there were 2,111 religious discrimination claims (based on the EEOC statistics). There were 13,814 and 4,341 claims of religious discrimination claims in 2022 and 2023, respectively. Enforcement and Litigation Statistics: EEOC Religion-Based vs Total Charges, U.S. EQUAL EMP. OPPORTUNITY COMM'N, https://www.eeoc.gov/dat a/enforcement-and-litigation-statistics-0 (last visited 26 June, 2024).
- The large majority of these cases were the result of religious objections to employer COVID-19 vaccine mandates. Under the older "de minimis" harm standard, employers often concluded that they could not accommodate the employee's objections, and the employees were terminated. They then filed religious discrimination charges.
- See Enforcement and Litigation Statistics: EEOC Religion-Based Resolutions by Type, U.S. EQUAL EMP. OPPORTUNITY COMM'N, https://www.eeoc.gov/dat a/enforcement-and-litigation-statistics-0 (last visited 26 June, 2024).

All Charges	2021	2022	2023
National	61,331	73,485	81,055
Virginia	4,207	5,299	5,945
Religion Charges
Virginia	69	360	155

- While there is no right to free speech in the private workplace, employees can still claim that the employer is discriminating based on the employee's religion if the employer is attempting to force them to say or do something that the employee claims is in conflict with their religious beliefs. It is important to remember that, under Groff, the employer's burden is higher than it was previously.

- Recent Fourth Circuit cases have, at the same time, extended protections under Bostock , in cases such as Williams v. Kincaid (allowing a prisoner the right to stay with women because housing was assigned based on genitalia), Williams v. Kincaid, 45 F.4th 759 (4th Cir. 2022), and Grimm v. Gloucester County School Board (requiring public schools to allow transgender students to use the bathroom of their gender identity), Grimm v. Gloucester Cnty. Sch. Bd., 972 F.3d 586 (4th Cir. 2020).
- Thus, there could be conflict in the workplace in balancing potentially competing interests between religious viewpoints and sexual orientation/gender identity rights.
- As discussed below, these conflicting interests will lead to some difficult questions as employers seek to determine who to accommodate.

G. Recent Religious Discrimination Cases

- Triple Canopy, Inc., a Virginia-based company, agreed to pay $110,759 because of alleged religious discrimination against an employee who believed that men must wear beards and was denied an accommodation. Triple Canopy, Inc. to Pay $110,759 to Settle EEOC Religious Discrimination and Retaliation Lawsuit, U.S. EQUAL EMP. OPPORTUNITY COMM'N (Dec. 26, 2023), https://www.eeoc.gov/newsroom/triple-canopy-inc-pay-110759-settle-eeoc-religious-discrimination-and-retaliation-lawsuit.
- Passages Family Support, a nonprofit in Washington, paid $95,000 to resolve a religious discrimination charge for failing to provide an accommodation. Passages Family Support to Pay $95,000 to Resolve Religious Discrimination Charge, U.S. EQUAL EMP. OPPORTUNITY COMM'N (Apr. 4, 2024), https://www.eeoc.gov/newsroom/passages-family-support-pay-95000-resolve-religious-discrimination-charge.
- Hank's Furniture, a nationwide retailer, agreed to pay$110,000 to settle a religious discrimination suit. According to the suit, Hank's Furniture summarily denied an employee's request for a religious exemption to taking a COVID-19 vaccine without investigating the feasibility of an accommodation. The company also disputed the validity of the employee's sincerely held beliefs. Hank's Furniture to Pay $110,000 in EEOC Religious Discrimination Lawsuit, U.S. EQUAL EMP. II. Vlaming v. W. Point Sch. Bd., 302 Va. 504 (2023).[2]

A. The Majority Opinion

1. Facts

- This case was decided on demurrer, so the facts were as alleged in the Complaint.
- Vlaming was a high school French teacher. He learned that a student he taught had determined to identify as male instead of female and changed names. Id. at 522.
- Vlaming stated that his religious practice prohibited him from lying and that he believed that referring to a female as a male by using a male pronoun was lying. Id. at 523.
- To accommodate student Doe, Vlaming had all of his students pick new "French" names to be used that schoolyear, so as not to draw attention to Doe changing names. Vlaming began to refer to Doe using the French name Doe selected. Vlaming also tried to avoid using any third person pronouns in class, so Doe did not feel singled out. Id. at 522–23.
- During a conference with Doe's parents about this new practice, Vlaming was told that he should leave his beliefs out of the matter and use masculine pronouns to refer to Doe. Id. at 523.
- Vlaming then had multiple meetings with school officials who all informed him that he needed to refer to Doe

[2] Noah and Todd published an extensive and comprehensive article analyzing Vlaming on Gentry Locke's website in February 2024. The article can be accessed at: https://www.gentrylocke.com/article/supreme-court-of-virginias-vlaming-decision-is-a-legal-earthquake-with-major-implications-for-virginia-businesses-organizations-and-government-entities/using masculine pronouns. Vlaming was ultimately fired after receiving warning letters from the school about his continued failure to use masculine pronouns to refer to Doe. Id. at 524–26.

- Vlaming filed a complaint, based entirely on state law claims, for free-exercise, free-speech, due-process, and breach-of-contract claims. Id. at 526.

2. Historical Analysis of Virginia Religion Clauses

- The court began by noting that there are marked differences between the Free Exercise clause of the Virginia and United States Constitutions. Thus, the court concluded, the federal jurisprudence for the First Amendment Free Exercise clause did not apply to the Virginia Constitution. Id. at 530.
- The Court then dove into the historical understandings of the free-exercise clauses in the Virginia Constitution, relying on the drafting history, the Virginia Statute for Religious Freedom, and other contemporary writings to divine the meaning.
    - George Mason's proposed version of the text provided a narrower protection for religion, allowing the state to infringe the exercise of religion when that exercise would disturb the "peace, the happiness, or safety of society." Id. at 533.
    - James Madison's version provided more protection for religious exercise, allowing it to be infringed only in cases where the "preservation of equal liberty and the existence of the State are manifestly endangered." Id. at 533.
    - The Court then implemented the limiting principle found in the 1786 Act for Religious Freedom, which permitted interference with an individual's religious principles only when "[those] principles break out into overt acts against peace and good order." Id. at 535–537.

3. The New Test

- The Dissent refers to the new test as a "super scrutiny." Id. at 589 (Mann, J., dissenting).
- The new test asks whether a person's religious practice results in overt acts that "'invariably pose some substantial threat to public safety, peace, or order,' and if so, whether the government's compelling state interest in protecting the public from that threat, when examined under the rigors of strict scrutiny, could be satisfied by 'less restrictive means.'" Vlaming, 302 Va. at 540. If either prong fails, then the government must accommodate the religious practice. Id.
- The court also stated that when religious liberty merges with free-speech protections, mere objectionable and hurtful religious speech or non-speech does not satisfy the standard. Id. at 541.

B. Implications for Virginia Employers

1. Potential Employer Actions

- While Vlaming was decided in the context of an individual's religious beliefs, the Supreme Court of the United States has recognized that organizations can also exercise religious beliefs. Burwell v. Hobby Lobby Stores, Inc., 573 U.S. 682 (2014).
- Thus, under Vlaming's new regime of regulation of religious beliefs, there could be avenues for employers to attack certain laws applicable to businesses on the grounds that they infringe upon that organization's right to the free exercise of its religion.
- It will be up to businesses to determine what legal requirements they wish to challenge on the ground that their free exercise rights have been infringed, and whether the challenge to the law is worth the benefits it may provide.

2. Accommodation of Religious Beliefs and Practices

- But the Vlaming decision may also become the manner in which the VHRA is interpreted with respect to workplace religious discrimination claims.
- Remember that the VHRA was significantly enhanced and amended in 2020. There is scant case authority interpreting the VHRA in the Virginia state courts.

3. Further Workplace Protection for Employees Who Allege Discrimination on Basis of Sexual Orientation or Gender Identity.

- Following the Bostock case, the Federal EEOC has aggressively published rules and pronouncements emphasizing the legal rights to be accorded in the workplace to transgender employees as well as gay or lesbian employees.
- For example, on April 29, 2024, the EEOC published new final guidance on workplace harassment, "Enforcement Guidance on Harassment in the Workplace." In the guidance, the EEOC makes clear that employers may not subject employees to discrimination or harassment based n their sexual orientation or gender identity.

C. Kluge v. Brownsburg Cmty. Sch. Corp., 2024 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 78340 (S.D. Ind. 2024).

1. Facts

- Case with allegations similar to Vlaming. Demonstrates the tension in play for employers.
- Kluge was an orchestra teacher at Brownsburg High School. When the school announced a policy to allow transgender students to use their preferred names in class, Kluge refused to use those preferred names, based on his purported religious beliefs. Id. at 5, 10–11.
- Instead, Kluge began to refer to students solely by their last names. Id. at 13.

- The school alleged that this caused substantial classroom disruptions and made students feel uncomfortable in class. Id. at 15–25
- Kluge had several meetings with the school administration regarding his accommodation. Id. at 25–29.
- Eventually he filed what he believed to be a conditional resignation that he could withdraw. However, the school bylaws and state law did not allow the withdrawal of his resignation. Id. at 32.
- Mr. Kluge's resignation was not cancelled and he was then unemployed and filed suit based on a failure to accommodate. (There was also a retaliation claim that the court dismissed.) Id. at 36.

2. Holding and Reasoning

- The court granted summary judgment for the school.
- The court reasoned that, while Kluge had shown that he had a religious belief that prevented him from acting in accord with the school's name policy, an accommodation for Kluge would have been an undue hardship to the school. Id. at 46, 67, 72.
- The court noted that the nature of the school's business was "educating all students," which the school achieved by "fostering a learning environment of respect and affirmation." Id. at 51.
- The court reasoned that, because there would be substantial harm to students as a result of the disruptions in class and making other students and staff feel uncomfortable, that qualified as an undue hardship justifying denial of the requested accommodation. Id. at 61–62, 67.
- The court also noted that accommodating Kluge's beliefs would have subjected it to potential liability, which also constituted an undue hardship. Id. at 72.

D. Ibanez v. Albemarle Cnty. Sch. Bd., 80 Va. App. 169 (2024).

1. Facts

- Albemarle County Public Schools created a curriculum focusing on "Anti-Racism." Under this curriculum, there were a set of pilot program slides that were presented in eighth grade classes. Id. at 178.
- No part of this curriculum allowed for the punishment of students for not participating, and it allowed parents to opt out of the curriculum if they chose to do so. Id. at 179–81.

2. Equal Protection Claim

- The plaintiffs claimed that the curriculum led to discrimination against their students because the curriculum called for students to make daily choices to work against dominant identities, such as whiteness and Christianity. Id. at 196–97.
- The court stated that this was insufficient to show a discriminatory action by the government and that the plaintiffs were, unsuccessfully, attempting to turn a differentiation in governmental messaging into a differentiation in treatment. Id. at 197.
- The court stated that for a claim of a "racially hostile educational environment," it was required for the plaintiffs to show objective and subjective proof that the environment was hostile. Id. at 201.

3. Compelled Speech and Viewpoint Discrimination Claims

- The plaintiffs also claimed that the school's curriculum forced students to engage in compelled speech and that it discriminated based on viewpoint. Id. at 202–03.
- The court found that there was no compelled speech argument. The slides in the curriculum merely called for thought exercises and there was no requirement that students must engage in speech. Id. at 205.
- The court distinguished this from the situation in Vlaming where the teacher was fired for what he did not say, whereas in Ibanez the students were not forced to say anything at all. Id. at 206.

- The court also rejected the viewpoint discrimination claim because there were no facts pleaded that showed the students speech was regulated in any way. Instead all questions posed on the slides were thought exercises and not commands to engage in particular speech. Id. at 209.
- The court also stated that even if there was viewpoint discrimination, it was not properly pleaded because the plaintiffs had not adduced any evidence of an adverse action against students for engaging in speech against the anti-racist curriculum. Id. at 210.
- There was no evidence that the school ever stated that such speech would be deemed a racist act under the new policy and the plaintiffs were only speculating that students would be punished under a separate policy. Id. at 211.

4. Implications of the Ibanez Decision

- Merely presenting an opposing viewpoint does not constitute a hostile environment in and of itself. However, there still could be instances in which the dissemination or advocation for these views could rise the level of creating a hostile environment.
- While employees in the private sector do not have free speech rights, they could still claim discrimination where an employer is attempting to force them to say something in conflict with their beliefs. However, under Ibanez, if there is not an explicitly referenced disciplinary policy, then an employee likely would not be able to bring a discrimination claim, so long as the policy had not been enforced against them because the claim would be too speculative.
    - However, if it rises to the level of creating a hostile environment there could be other issues.
- The Virginia Supreme Court has granted review, so stay tuned!

Helping your practice stay out of legal JEOPARDY

Gentry Locke Seminar

September 6, 2024 – Roanoke

Emily S. Mordecai
Ryan J. Starks
T. Tyler Moses

Format Overview: The presentation cover topics on various Virginia's Rules of Professional Conduct. The audience will be encouraged to participate through the use of the smartphone application "Poll Everywhere," which enables members of the audience to answer questions while providing a breakdown of the audience's answers.

This outline is in two sections: hypotheticals and answers. There are 16 hypotheticals, which are arranged by topic. The answers are at the end of the presentation along with the text of the applicable Rules.

List of Topics

Communications Concerning a Lawyer's Services (Rule 7.1)

#1. In July 2024, a lawyer at Smith & Jones LLP obtained a $3 million jury verdict in a medical malpractice case, which included $350,000 in punitive damages and $2,650,000 in compensatory damages (the current medical malpractice cap). He shared the verdict in an online advertisement, which stated: "Smith & Jones LLP obtained a $3 million medical malpractice verdict for a severely injured client. Our client came to us with a concern regarding Virginia's $2,650,000 medical malpractice damages cap, but we delivered on our promise to fight to get our client every penny he deserved."

Does this advertisement violate Rule 7.1?

(A) No. Even though it does not disclose the amounts of compensatory and punitive damages included in the verdict, it accurately and truthfully states the total verdict amount.
(B) Yes. The advertisement, although accurate in describing the total verdict amount, misleads the reader and suggests that the firm somehow has the ability to obtain exceptions to Virginia's medical malpractice compensatory damage cap.
(C) It depends on whether anyone who saw the advertisement was actually misled or misinformed by it.

Conflict of Interest: General Rule (Rule 1.7)

#2. Attorney Jones represents a Richmond-area banker in a white-collar criminal case involving the banker's suspected embezzlement of funds from the account of Mr. Rich Rolling, the bank's wealthiest account holder. Three years ago, Attorney Jones represented Mr. Rolling's sister in an unrelated civil case. Attorney Jones' representation of the sister has since concluded.

Is there a potential conflict of interest such that Attorney Jones should obtain a written waiver from the banker?

(A) No, so long as there is no indication that Mr. Rolling's sister would be called as a witness to testify against the banker.
(B) No. Attorney Jones would never need a waiver because the cases are unrelated.
(C) Yes. Attorney Jones is required to obtain a written waiver because, even though there is no indication at present that Mr. Rolling's sister will be called to testify against the banker, that possibility could arise in the future.

Imputed Disqualification: General Rule (Rule 1.10)

#3. Attorney Smith received a phone call from the owner of a chemical plant in town, who urgently needed legal representation in connection with a fire at the plant caused (in part) by defective fire detection systems manufactured and installed by Fire Proof Plus LLC. Attorney Smith sent an email to all lawyers at his firm asking if any of them knew of any conflicts but, in an effort to get back to the potential client as quickly as possible, did not run a formal check through his firm's conflicts check system. After hearing no information indicating a conflict by email, Attorney Smith took the case. The conflicts check would have revealed that a semi-retired partner opened a matter for the defense of Fire Proof Plus LLC in a similar case two years ago and had since negotiated a settlement but had not yet drafted the agreement.

Is there an imputed conflict under Rule 1.10?

(A) No. Attorney Jones did not have actual knowledge of the conflict, even after he affirmatively checked with all others at his firm.
(B) No. Attorney Jones' diligence in checking for conflicts was reasonable under the circumstances.
(C) Yes. Attorney Jones reasonably should have known of the conflict.

Rules 3.3 and 4.1 (LEO 1900)

#4. Attorney Jones represented a client in a personal injury case against the manufacturer of supplies used in a chemical plant where the client worked for 30 years. The client was able to testify by deposition, but his health quickly deteriorated in the days after. After reviewing the transcripts of the client and the expert toxicologist, the manufacturer offered Attorney Jones a $3 million settlement. The client died the day before the manufacturer relayed the offer to Attorney Jones. In responding to the offer, Attorney Jones disclosed the death of the client and accepted the offer. After paying himself the agreed upon contingency, he paid the remainder of the settlement to the client's family.

Did Attorney Jones violate the ethical rules?

(A) No, because he disclosed the death of the client to opposing counsel and did so before he accepted the offer.
(B) No, because he no longer owes any obligations to the client.
(C) Yes, because he no longer had a client to accept an offer on behalf of.
(D) Yes, because did not tell the client's family that he was going to accept the offer before doing so.

Client with Impairment (Rule 1.14)

#5. You run a trusts and estates practice in a small town in Virginia. One of your first clients, Beth, has consistently changed her will every five years since you have started practicing law and has regularly attended meetings by herself.

Beth recently scheduled a meeting with you with her daughter, Patty. When you meet with Beth, Patty does most of the talking. From speaking with Patty, you learn that Beth would like to drastically change the terms of her will, leaving nearly all of her estate to Patty rather than in equal shares to her three children. Additionally, Patty tells you that Beth has recently been experiencing some memory loss issues, which Beth does not dispute when hearing.

What should you do?

(A) Refuse to alter the provisions of Beth's will due to concerns with her capacity.
(B) Reach out to Beth's other children due to a concern of undue influence.

(C) Make an initial capacity determination during the consultation and a follow up determination when Beth comes in to sign.

Accepting Appointments (Rule 6.2)

#6. Attorney Amanda was recently assigned a pro bono case from its local courthouse. The client assigned to Amanda is a local fisherman, Frank. After speaking with Frank, Amanda learns that Frank was regularly taking his work home with him, which led to an unsatisfactory odor that permeated throughout the building. After numerous requests to refrain from doing so, Frank's landlord served him with an eviction notice. Amanda cannot stand seafood and finds the entire subject matter of the case repugnant. Amanda is afraid that her representation of Frank will be impaired due to her severe distaste for seafood and Frank's line of business. Can Amanda refuse the appointment of this case from the judge?

(A) Yes
(B) No
(C) Maybe

Disciplinary Authority; Choice of Law (Rule 8.5)

#7. Lawyer Lou is licensed to practice law in Virginia and in Maryland. Although Lou lives in Maryland, Lou has long been a member of the Virginia State Bar but has almost entirely focused his practice on Maryland law and maintains his membership with the Virginia Bar as an associate member.

Following the representation of an individual in Maryland, Lou was recently accused by a client of violating one of the Maryland Rules of Professional Conduct and was found to be not guilty of such accusations. However, months later, Lou receives a notice from the Virginia State Bar requesting more information about the accusation and the circumstances surrounding it. Does Lou need to provide additional information?

(A) Yes
(B) No
(C) Maybe

Confidentiality of Information (Rule 1.6)

#8. Your estate planning client has recently gotten into some trouble with the Internal Revenue Service for failing to report certain income on their tax return. You have never practiced in the tax sphere and refer the client to another attorney with a tax background. After the client consults the tax attorney, the tax attorney contacts you requesting documentation and other information about the client. Assuming that the client has in fact retained the new attorney, you decide to send the client's confidential information to them. You later find out that the client sought counsel from a different tax attorney.

True or False: by sharing the confidential information with another attorney who has not yet been retained, you have breached your ethical duty to protect confidential information.

(A) True
(B) False

Fees (Rule 1.5)

#9. Sarah is a longtime client of Larry Lawyer. She recently engaged him to represent her in an employment discrimination dispute. Larry has been a solo practitioner for many years but is unfamiliar with employment law. Larry asks employment lawyer Bob, whom he met at a Bar Conference earlier the same year, whether he would be interested in assisting. Bob agrees, and the two enter into a fee-splitting arrangement. Bob and Larry begin work on Sarah's case, after which Larry informs Sarah of the agreement and discloses the terms of the division of the fee. Sarah readily agrees, and Larry obtains Sarah's consent in writing. Has Larry acted properly?

(A) Yes. Sarah is a longtime client, and Larry fully informed her of the arrangement and obtained her written consent.
(B) No. Sarah's consent must have been obtained prior to rendering legal services.
(C) Maybe, as long as the total fee is reasonable.

#10. You have been hired to represent John Reno in a personal injury lawsuit against his neighbor, Janice Soprano related to an incident wherein Soprano threw a glass dish filled with piping hot baked ziti at Reno. Reno sustained serious burns and lacerations. You have never represented Reno before, but you have represented several of his associates on personal injury matters in the past and have met Reno several times before related to these representations. Because you know Reno and have worked with his colleagues, you call him and tell him that you are happy to represent him at your regular fee. To follow up, you send Reno an engagement letter setting out the terms of the representation but do not include details as to your fee. You've handled several cases like this in the jurisdiction before and feel confident that your fee is reasonable in this matter.

Have you acted properly under the rules?

A) Yes, your fees are likely reasonable under the circumstance and you adequately appraised the client of such fees.
B) No, you did not explain the fees to the client.
C) Yes, because you've handled several personal injury cases for Reno's associates, you did not need to explain the amount, basis, or rate of the fees.

Meritorious Claims and Contentions (Rule 3.1)

#11. You agreed to represent Martin in a claim against Martin's employer for intentional infliction of emotional distress due to insulting remarks about his intelligence and maturity. After researching past court decisions, you concluded that such claims almost always fail in similar employment settings. You now wish to withdraw before filing the complaint because you are convinced Martin is going to lose. However, Martin insists on you filing the complaint to avoid missing the statute of limitations, even if he needs to find another lawyer for discovery and trial. Would it be permissible for you to file the complaint under these circumstances?

(A) No, because your research has led to the conclusion that courts usually disfavor such claims as a rule.
(B) Yes, because Martin's claim has some basis in fact and law.
(C) Maybe, as long as you withdraw after filing the complaint.

12. Attorney Kim is representing Parker in a personal injury case. While Parker was injured, he also informs Kim that he wants to proceed with a lawsuit at this time primarily to harass the defendant, whom he holds a grudge against, and make things as difficult as possible. In addition, the evidence currently available does not fully support Parker's claim, but Kim believes that the necessary evidence will be uncovered during discovery. What is the best course of action for Kim?

(A) Proceed with filing the lawsuit per the client's wishes despite the lack of evidence since it can be developed in discovery.
(B) Advise Parker about the ethical obligation to avoid pursuing actions primarily intended to harass or inconvenience others and recommend alternative legal strategies.
(C) Withdraw from representing Parker immediately due to the insufficient evidence and the client's intent.

Lawyer as Witness (Rule 3.7)

#13. You prepared the will for a longtime client and acted as one of the two subscribing witnesses to its execution. In the will, the client gave everything to the local animal shelter and nothing to his son and sole heir. Upon the client's death one year later, the executor named in the will asks you to represent him in probating the will and administering the estate. He informs you that the son is contesting the probate of the will on the grounds that your client lacked the required mental capacity at the time the will was executed. You believe that your client was fully competent at all times and will so testify at trial. The other subscribing witness to the client's will has also died. Under these circumstances, would it be proper for you to represent the executor in the probate of the will?

(A) No, because you will be called to testify on a contested issue of fact.
(B) No, because you would be representing an interest adverse to the interests of the client's heir.
(C) Yes, because you are the sole surviving witness to the execution of the will.
(D) Yes, because your testimony will support the validity of the will.

Conflicts of Interest: Former Client (Rule 1.9)

#14. While working as an associate at Black & Associates, Lenny Lawyer represented Schrute Farms in a personal injury lawsuit arising from an incident where an invitee sustained food poising after drinking Schrute Farm's complementary beet juice.

About two years after the representation concluded, Lenny started his own firm, LL Attorneys, PLC, and was retained by John Scranton in connection with his personal injury lawsuit against Schrute Farms, wherein Scranton alleges he was injured because of a negligently maintained tree branch on the property.

Is Lenny's representation proper?

A) No, because a lawyer who has formerly represented a client in a matter cannot represent another person whose interests are materially adverse to the interests of the former client.
B) Yes, provided that Lenny obtains consent from both Schrute Farms and John Scranton after thoroughly explaining the situation and potential conflict.
C) Yes, because the matters are not substantially related.

Communication With Persons Represented by Counsel (Rule 4.2)

#15. Anne represents Green Top, Inc. in a sexual harassment suit filed against it by several former employees. While at the nail salon, Anne strikes up a conversation with a woman sitting a few chairs down. They begin a brief conversation about the unusually warm temperatures they had been experiencing. Their conversation ends quickly because the woman's friend sits down and they begin to talk. Anne does not know that the woman is one of the former employee Plaintiffs. However, while waiting for her nails to dry, Anne overhears the woman say that she "decided to join that bogus lawsuit against Green Top after the others convinced her that the company would never be able to prove their sexual harassment claims were all made up." At this point, Anne realizes the woman is one of the former employee Plaintiffs and quickly walks away and sits in another area of the salon to avoid overhearing any more information.

What should Anne do with this information?

A) Anne should report the woman's fraud.
B) Anne should keep it to herself as this was an improper communication with a party that Anne knows is represented.
C) Anne is not required to report the fraud and should use the information to her advantage.

Reporting Misconduct (Rule 8.3)

#16. Bob Dylan and Tom Petty went to law school together and began practicing in the same jurisdiction. Bob always thought Tom was unorganized and unreliable. They ran into each other at bar events and in court rooms frequently for years. Recently, Bob observed Tom arguing a plea in bar. While he was prepared and argued completely, Tom looked disheveled and tired. About a week later at a law school alumni event, Bob overhears Tom's old law school roommate say that he couldn't "believe that Tom can still get away with those wild all night benders but I saw him do it last week." Bob thought that had to have been the night before that plea in bar hearing. Several months later, Bob learns that Tom has been hired as a senior associate at his law firm. Bob is upset and appalled that the firm would even consider allowing someone as unprofessional as Tom. He considers reporting Tom for misconduct based on Tom's history of inappropriate drinking.

What should Bob do?

A) Bob should report Tom to the appropriate authority. He has first hand knowledge that Tom has a history of unprofessional conduct and knows that he drinks heavily based on Tom's old roommate's statement.
B) Bob should not report Tom. While the information he has raises a substantial question as to Tom's fitness to practice law, the information is not reliable.
C) Bob should not report Tom because the information he has does not raise a substantial question as to Tom's fitness to practice law and it is not reliable.

ANSWERS

QUESTION #1

Answer: B. This is not allowed. The advertisement, even if technically truthful, is misleading because it suggests that the firm has an ability to obtain an exception to the medical malpractice compensatory damages cap.

Comment 1 to the Rule is instructive here: "Truthful statements that are misleading are also prohibited by this Rule. A truthful statement is misleading if it omits a fact necessary to make the lawyer's communication considered as a whole not materially misleading. A truthful statement is also misleading if there is a substantial likelihood that it will lead a reasonable person to formulate a specific conclusion about the lawyer or the lawyer's services for which there is no reasonable factual foundation."

Text of Rule 7.1

A lawyer shall not make a false or misleading communication about the lawyer or the lawyer's services. A communication is false or misleading if it contains a material misrepresentation of fact or law, or omits a fact necessary to make the statement considered as a whole not materially misleading.

QUESTION #2

A. A concurrent conflict does not exist, and Attorney Jones is therefore not required to obtain a waiver so long as there is no indication that the sister will be called to testify against the banker. This case is loosely based on the facts of Holman v. Commonwealth, 2022 Va. App. LEXIS 290 (Va. App. 2022), where the Virginia Court of Appeals rejected claims a public defender's representation of a client convicted of murder created a conflict under Rule 1.7 because the public defender had previously represented the victim's sister, brother, and niece in unrelated cases. The court explained: "The mere fact that [the public defender] represented [the victim's] sister, brother, and niece in unrelated matters does not rise to the level of an apparent conflict of interest . . . The record does not reflect that [the public defender] continued to represent [the victim's] relatives through the time of the arraignment, nor does [the client] so allege. [The victim's] sister, brother, and niece were not co-defendants at [the client's] trial, nor were they called as witnesses by the Commonwealth to testify against [the client]—circumstances that, if alleged, could have raised an apparent conflict of interest." Id. at *10-11.

Text of Rule 1.7

(a) Except as provided in paragraph (b), a lawyer shall not represent a client if the representation involves a concurrent conflict of interest. A concurrent conflict of interest exists if:
    1. the representation of one client will be directly adverse to another client; or
    2. there is significant risk that the representation of one or more clients will be materially limited by the lawyer's responsibilities to another client, a former client or a third person or by a personal interest of the lawyer.

(b) Notwithstanding the existence of a concurrent conflict of interest under paragraph(a), a lawyer may represent a client if each affected client consents after consultation, and:

1. the lawyer reasonably believes that the lawyer will be able to provide competent and diligent representation to each affected client;
2. the representation is not prohibited by law;
3. the representation does not involve the assertion of a claim by one client against another client represented by the lawyer in the same litigation or other proceeding before a tribunal; and
4. the consent from the client is memorialized in writing.

QUESTION #3

Answer: C. Yes. The attorney reasonably should have known about the conflict. See Comment 2a to the rule: "A lawyer or firm should maintain and use an appropriate system for detecting conflicts of interest. The failure to maintain a system for identifying conflicts or to use that system when making a decision to undertake employment in a particular matter may be deemed a violation of Rule 1.10(a) if proper use of a system would have identified the conflict."

Text of Rule 1.10

(a) While lawyers are associated in a firm, none of them shall represent a client when the lawyer knows or reasonably should know that any one of them practicing alone would be prohibited from doing so by Rules 1.6, 1.7, 1.9, or 2.10(e).
(b) When a lawyer has terminated an association with a firm, the firm is not prohibited from thereafter representing a person with interests materially adverse to those of a client represented by the formerly associated lawyer and not currently represented by the firm, unless:
    1. the matter is the same or substantially related to that in which the formerly associated lawyer represented the client; and
    2. any lawyer remaining in the firm has information protected by Rules 1.6 and 1.9(c) that is material to the matter.
(c) A disqualification prescribed by this Rule may be waived by the affected client under the conditions stated in Rule 1.7.
(d) The imputed prohibition of improper transactions is governed by Rule 1.8(k).
(e) The disqualification of lawyers associated in a firm with former or current government lawyers is governed by Rule 1.11.

QUESTION #4

Answer: C. This question is addressed by Legal Ethics Opinion 1900, which states that in the event that a lawyer's client dies, "the lawyer must disclose the client's death to opposing counsel . . . before any further substantive communication. If the matter is before a court, the lawyer must disclose the client's death to the court no later than the next communication with, or appearance before, the court."

Legal Ethics Opinion 1900 also overruled former Legal Ethics Opinion 952, which permitted a lawyer to accept a settlement offer after the death his client, and held that a lawyer cannot accept a settlement offer on behalf of a deceased client even if he discloses the death of the client. It explained that "the lawyer has no client and no authority to accept or make a settlement after the client's death unless and until the administrator of the estate or other successor in interest retains the lawyer to pursue any remaining claim on behalf of the estate."

Text of Legal Ethics Opinion 1900 (Approved by the Virginia Supreme Court Jan. 4, 2024)[1]:

LEGAL ETHICS OPINION 1900. LAWYER'S DUTY TO DISCLOSE DEATH OF CLIENT.

QUESTION PRESENTED

When a lawyer's client dies during the representation, what duty does the lawyer have to disclose the client's death to opposing counsel or to the court?

APPLICABLE RULES AND OPINIONS

Rule 3.3. Candor Toward The Tribunal.

(a) A lawyer shall not knowingly:

(1) make a false statement of fact or law to a tribunal;

(2) fail to disclose a fact to a tribunal when disclosure is necessary to avoid assisting a criminal or fraudulent act by the client;

Rule 4.1. Truthfulness In Statements To Others.

In the course of representing a client a lawyer shall not knowingly:

(a) make a false statement of fact or law; or

(b) fail to disclose a fact when disclosure is necessary to avoid assisting a criminal or fraudulent act by a client.

ANSWER

The lawyer must disclose the client's death to opposing counsel or the opposing party if pro se before any further substantive communication. If the matter is before a court, the lawyer must disclose the client's death to the court no later than the next communication with, or appearance before, the court.

ANALYSIS

The ethical duties begin with the legal conclusion that the death of the client terminates the representation and the lawyer's actual authority to act for the client. Restatement (Third) of the Law Governing Lawyers, § 31 Termination of a Lawyer's Authority, Comment e. Given that foundation, any act or omission that perpetuates the belief that the lawyer represents the client or has any authority to act on behalf of a client violates Rule 4.1 either by affirmatively misrepresenting the lawyer's authority or by failing to act and therefore passively misrepresenting the lawyer's authority.

In Formal Opinion 397, the American Bar Association Standing Committee on Ethics and Professional Responsibility concluded:

> The death of a client means that the lawyer, at least for the moment, no longer has a client and, if she does thereafter continue in the matter, it will be on behalf of a different client. We therefore conclude that a failure to disclose that occurrence is tantamount to making a false statement of material fact within the meaning of Rule 4.1(a). . . . Prior to the death, the lawyer acted on behalf of an identified client. When, however, the death occurs, the lawyer ceases to represent that identified client. Accordingly, any subsequent communication to opposing counsel with respect to the matter would be the equivalent of a knowing, affirmative misrepresentation should the lawyer fail to disclose the fact that she no longer represents the previously identified client.

The opinion also concludes that an appearance before a court without disclosing the client's death would violate Rule 3.3 by making a false statement of material fact to the court. Therefore, the ABA concluded, the lawyer must inform the opposing lawyer and the court of the client's death in her first communication after learning of that fact.

The committee agrees that the lawyer must disclose the client's death before any further substantive communication with opposing counsel and must disclose to the court no later than the first communication or appearance after learning of the client's death. The lawyer does not violate Rule 4.1 by simply avoiding any substantive communication with opposing counsel while, for example, determining whether there is a representative of the client's estate and whether that representative wishes to hire the lawyer to continue to pursue the client's claim.

LEO 952, which concluded that a lawyer can accept a settlement offer without disclosing the client's death absent a direct inquiry about the client's health, but that the lawyer should disclose the client's death when accepting the offer to "avoid an appearance of impropriety," is overruled by this opinion. The committee concludes that a lawyer cannot accept or make an offer of settlement on behalf of a deceased client, even if the lawyer discloses the client's death at the same time. As stated above, the lawyer has no client and no authority to accept or make a settlement after the client's death unless and until the administrator of the estate or other successor in interest retains the lawyer to pursue any remaining claim on behalf of the estate.

Answer: C. Rule 1.14(a) states that "[w]hen a client's capacity to make adequately considered decisions in connection with a representation is diminished, whether because of minority, mental impairment or some other reason, the lawyer shall, as far as reasonably possible, maintain a normal client-lawyer relationship with the client." The attorney in this case could ask a number of qualifying questions to ensure that Beth has capacity both on the day of consult and on the day she signs her will. Such qualifiers should include her orientation to time, place, and the situation, as well as specifics about the will. A client with diminished capacity often has the ability to understand, deliberate upon, and reach conclusions about matters affecting the client's own well-being. Additionally, a cautionary reminder on the potential for undue influence: when necessary to assist in representation, the presence of family members or others generally does not affect the applicability of the attorney-client evidentiary privilege. Nevertheless, the lawyer must keep the client's interests foremost and, except for authorized protective action, must look to the client and not family members, to make decisions on the client's behalf.

a) When a client's capacity to make adequately considered decisions in connection with a representation is diminished, whether because of minority, mental impairment or some other reason, the lawyer shall, as far as reasonably possible, maintain a normal client-lawyer relationship with the client.
b) When the lawyer reasonably believes that the client has diminished capacity, is at risk of substantial physical, financial or other harm unless action is taken and cannot adequately act in the client's own interest, the lawyer may take reasonably necessary protective action, including consulting with individuals or entities that have the ability to take action to protect the client and, in appropriate cases, seeking the appointment of a guardian ad litem, conservator or guardian.
c) Information relating to the representation of a client with diminished capacity is protected by Rule 1.6. When taking protective action pursuant to paragraph (b), the lawyer is impliedly authorized under Rule 1.6(a) to reveal information about the client, but only to the extent reasonably necessary to protect the client's interests.

QUESTION #6

Answer (C). Rule 6.2 Accepting Appointments states that a lawyer should not seek to avoid appointment by a tribunal to represent a person except for good cause, such as:

1. representing the client is likely to result in violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct or other law;
2. representing the client is likely to result in an unreasonable financial burden on the lawyer; or
3. the client or the cause is so repugnant to the lawyer as to be likely to impair the client-lawyer relationship or the lawyer's ability to represent the client.

Rule 6.2(c) seems to be implicated here, given that Amanda finds seafood repugnant. If Amanda is able to demonstrate that her representation or her relationship with Frank is likely to be impaired as a result, her seeking to be recused from the appointment would likely be considered acceptable.

QUESTION #7

Answer: C. Rule 8.5 was recently amended to state that a lawyer admitted to practice in this jurisdiction is subject to the disciplinary authority of Virginia, regardless of where the lawyer's conduct occurs. Despite the Maryland State Bar's dismissal of the claim against Lou, he may still be disciplined by the Virginia State Bar following its independent determination of the situation.

Text of Rule 8.5

a) Disciplinary Authority. A lawyer admitted to practice in this jurisdiction is subject to the disciplinary authority of Virginia, regardless of where the lawyer's conduct occurs. A lawyer not admitted in Virginia is also subject to the disciplinary authority of Virginia if the lawyer provides, holds himself out as providing, or offers to provide legal services in Virginia. By doing so, such lawyer consents to the appointment of the Clerk of the Supreme Court of Virginia as his or her agent for purposes of notices of any disciplinary action by the Virginia State Bar. A lawyer may be subject for the same conduct to the disciplinary authority of Virginia and any other jurisdiction where the lawyer is admitted.
b) Choice of Law. In any exercise of the disciplinary authority of Virginia, the rules of professional conduct to be applied shall be as follows:
    1. for conduct in connection with a proceeding in a court, agency, or other tribunal before which a lawyer appears, the rules to be applied shall be the rules of the jurisdiction in which the court, agency, or other tribunal sits, unless the rules of the court, agency, or other tribunal provide otherwise;
    2. for any other conduct, the rules of the jurisdiction in which the lawyer's conduct occurred; and
    3. notwithstanding subparagraphs (b)(1) and (b)(2), for conduct in the course of providing, holding out as providing, or offering to provide legal services in Virginia, the Virginia Rules of Professional Conduct shall apply.

QUESTION #8

Answer: True. The attorney may share confidential information from the client with other persons to the extent it is necessary to carry out the representation—this includes "disclosures that are impliedly authorized in order to carry out the representation" under Rule 1.6(a). That said, as a best practice, when referring matters not within your expertise to other attorneys, such as the one contemplated here, you should receive confirmation that they are formally engaged before any confidential information is shared. Express consent from the client in writing would serve as the best evidence of such confirmation. Paragraph (d) also requires a lawyer to act reasonably to safeguard information protected under this Rule against unauthorized access by third parties and against inadvertent or unauthorized disclosure by the lawyer or other persons who are participating in the representation of the client or who are subject to the lawyer's supervision.

Text of Rule 1.6

a) A lawyer shall not reveal information protected by the attorney-client privilege under applicable law or other information gained in the professional relationship that the client has requested be held inviolate or the disclosure of which would be embarrassing or would be likely to be detrimental to the client unless the client consents after consultation, except for disclosures that are impliedly authorized in order to carry out the representation, and except as stated in paragraphs (b) and (c).
b) To the extent a lawyer reasonably believes necessary, the lawyer may reveal:
    1. such information to comply with law or a court order;
    2. such information to establish a claim or defense on behalf of the lawyer in a controversy between the lawyer and the client, to establish a defense to a criminal charge or civil claim against the lawyer based upon conduct in which the client was involved, or to respond to allegations in any proceeding concerning the lawyer's representation of the client;

3. such information which clearly establishes that the client has, in the course of the representation, perpetrated upon a third party a fraud related to the subject matter of the representation;
4. such information reasonably necessary to protect a client's interests in the event of the representing lawyer's death, disability, incapacity or incompetence;
5. such information sufficient to participate in a law office management assistance program approved by the Virginia State Bar or other similar private program;
6. information to an outside agency necessary for statistical, bookkeeping, accounting, data processing, printing, or other similar office management purposes, provided the lawyer exercises due care in the selection of the agency, advises the agency that the information must be kept confidential and reasonably believes that the information will be kept confidential;
7. such information to prevent reasonably certain death or substantial bodily harm.

c) A lawyer shall promptly reveal:

1. the intention of a client, as stated by the client, to commit a crime reasonably certain to result in death or substantial bodily harm to another or substantial injury to the financial interests or property of another and the information necessary to prevent the crime, but before revealing such information, the attorney shall, where feasible, advise the client of the possible legal consequences of the action, urge the client not to commit the crime, and advise the client that the attorney must reveal the client's criminal intention unless thereupon abandoned. However, if the crime involves perjury by the client, the attorney shall take appropriate remedial measures as required by Rule 3.3; or
2. information concerning the misconduct of another attorney to the appropriate professional authority under Rule 8.3. When the information necessary to report the misconduct is protected under this Rule, the attorney, after consultation, must obtain client consent. Consultation should include full disclosure of all reasonably foreseeable consequences of both disclosure and non-disclosure to the client.

d) A lawyer shall make reasonable efforts to prevent the inadvertent or unauthorized disclosure of, or unauthorized access to, information protected under this Rule.

QUESTION #9

Answer: B. A division of a fee between lawyers who are not in the same firm may be made only if the division of fees and the client's consent is obtained in advance of the rendering of legal services. Rule 1.5, Paragraph (e). It does not matter that Sarah is a longtime client and gave her written consent—it came too late. Furthermore, Bob and Larry were not previously associated in a law firm and are working the matter together, so Paragraph (f) does not apply.

Text of Rule 1.5

a) A lawyer's fee shall be reasonable. The factors to be considered in determining the reasonableness of a fee include the following:

1. the time and labor required, the novelty and difficulty of the questions involved, and the skill requisite to perform the legal service properly;

2. the likelihood, if apparent to the client, that the acceptance of the particular employment will preclude other employment by the lawyer
3. the fee customarily charged in the locality for similar legal services;
4. the amount involved and the results obtained;
5. the time limitations imposed by the client or by the circumstances;
6. the nature and length of the professional relationship with the client;
7. the experience, reputation, and ability of the lawyer or lawyers performing the services; and
8. whether the fee is fixed or contingent.

b) The lawyer's fee shall be adequately explained to the client. When the lawyer has not regularly represented the client, the amount, basis or rate of the fee shall be communicated to the client, preferably in writing, before or within a reasonable time after commencing the representation.

c) A fee may be contingent on the outcome of the matter for which the service is rendered, except in a matter in which a contingent fee is prohibited by paragraph (d) or other law. A contingent fee agreement shall state in writing the method by which the fee is to be determined, including the percentage or percentages that shall accrue to the lawyer in the event of settlement, trial or appeal, litigation and other expenses to be deducted from the recovery, and whether such expenses are to be deducted before or after the contingent fee is calculated. Upon conclusion of a contingent fee matter, the lawyer shall provide the client with a written statement stating the outcome of the matter and, if there is a recovery, showing the remittance to the client and the method of its determination.

d) A lawyer shall not enter into an arrangement for, charge, or collect a contingent fee:

1. in a domestic relations matter, except in rare instances; or
2. for representing a defendant in a criminal case.

e) A division of a fee between lawyers who are not in the same firm may be made only if:

1. the client is advised of and consents to the participation of all the lawyers involved;
2. the terms of the division of the fee are disclosed to the client and the client consents thereto;
3. the total fee is reasonable; and
4. the division of fees and the client's consent is obtained in advance of the rendering of legal services, preferably in writing.

f) Paragraph (e) does not prohibit or regulate the division of fees between attorneys who were previously associated in a law firm or between any successive attorneys in the same matter. In any such instance, the total fee must be reasonable.

QUESTION #10

Answer: B. Pursuant to Rule 1.5(a) and (b) a lawyer's fees must be reasonable, and must be adequately explained to the client. While you have represented Reno's colleagues and already know Reno, you have never represented Reno. Thus, you must explain the amount, basis, or rate of the fee.

Text of Rule 1.5

g) A lawyer's fee shall be reasonable. The factors to be considered in determining the reasonableness of a fee include the following:

   9. the time and labor required, the novelty and difficulty of the questions involved, and the skill requisite to perform the legal service properly;
   10. the likelihood, if apparent to the client, that the acceptance of the particular employment will preclude other employment by the lawyer
   11. the fee customarily charged in the locality for similar legal services;
   12. the amount involved and the results obtained;
   13. the time limitations imposed by the client or by the circumstances;
   14. the nature and length of the professional relationship with the client;
   15. the experience, reputation, and ability of the lawyer or lawyers performing the services; and
   16. whether the fee is fixed or contingent.

h) The lawyer's fee shall be adequately explained to the client. When the lawyer has not regularly represented the client, the amount, basis or rate of the fee shall be communicated to the client, preferably in writing, before or within a reasonable time after commencing the representation.

i) A fee may be contingent on the outcome of the matter for which the service is rendered, except in a matter in which a contingent fee is prohibited by paragraph (d) or other law. A contingent fee agreement shall state in writing the method by which the fee is to be determined, including the percentage or percentages that shall accrue to the lawyer in the event of settlement, trial or appeal, litigation and other expenses to be deducted from the recovery, and whether such expenses are to be deducted before or after the contingent fee is calculated. Upon conclusion of a contingent fee matter, the lawyer shall provide the client with a written statement stating the outcome of the matter and, if there is a recovery, showing the remittance to the client and the method of its determination.

j) A lawyer shall not enter into an arrangement for, charge, or collect a contingent fee:

   3. in a domestic relations matter, except in rare instances; or
   4. for representing a defendant in a criminal case.

k) A division of a fee between lawyers who are not in the same firm may be made only if:

   5. the client is advised of and consents to the participation of all the lawyers involved;

6. the terms of the division of the fee are disclosed to the client and the client consents thereto;
7. the total fee is reasonable; and
8. the division of fees and the client's consent is obtained in advance of the rendering of legal services, preferably in writing.

l) Paragraph (e) does not prohibit or regulate the division of fees between attorneys who were previously associated in a law firm or between any successive attorneys in the same matter. In any such instance, the total fee must be reasonable.

QUESTION #11

Answer: B. Even though you do not believe Martin's position will prevail, this does not mean the action is frivolous. Comment 1 states you have a duty to use legal procedure for the fullest benefit of the client's cause. In addition, a lawyer may advance a claim or defense unwarranted by existing law if "it can be supported by good faith argument for an extension, modification, or reversal of existing law." Here, it appears there even may be at least some support in existing law for Martin's claims.

QUESTION #12

Answer: B. Comment 2 to Rule 3.1 provides that an action is frivolous if the client desires to have the action taken primarily for the purpose of harassment. Option C is not the best course of action because withdrawing immediately without first advising the client about ethical obligations and exploring alternative strategies is premature. Kim should first counsel Parker about the ethical concerns and seek a resolution that adheres to the rules. If the client still insists on pursuing a frivolous claim by filing a lawsuit, then withdrawal might become necessary.

Text of Rule 3.1

A lawyer shall not bring or defend a proceeding, or assert or controvert an issue therein, unless there is a basis for doing so that is not frivolous, which includes a good faith argument for an extension, modification or reversal of existing law. A lawyer for the defendant in a criminal proceeding, or the respondent in a proceeding that could result in incarceration, may nevertheless so defend the proceeding as to require that every element of the case be established.

Comment

[1] The advocate has a duty to use legal procedure for the fullest benefit of the client's cause, but also a duty not to abuse legal procedure. The law, both procedural and substantive, establishes the limits within which an advocate may proceed. However, the law is not always clear and is never static. Accordingly, in determining the proper scope of advocacy, account must be taken of the law's ambiguities and potential for change.

[2] The filing of an action or defense or similar action taken for a client is not frivolous merely because the facts have not first been fully substantiated or because the lawyer expects to develop vital evidence only by discovery. Such action is not frivolous even though the lawyer believes that the client's position ultimately will not prevail. The action is frivolous, however, if the client desires to have the action taken primarily for the purpose of harassing or maliciously injuring a person, or if the lawyer is unable either to make a good faith argument on the merits of the action taken or to support the action taken by a good faith argument for an extension, modification or reversal of existing law.

QUESTION #13

Answer: A. It is not proper because you would be called to testify on a contested issue of fact. The other exceptions under the rule to not apply because the testimony does not relate to the nature or value of the legal services rendered and the executor can find another attorney at this juncture without working substantial hardship on the client. The opposing party will be likely to suffer prejudice given the importance of the lawyer's testimony and the fact it conflicts with the son's. Furthermore, both parties can readily foresee the lawyer will be a witness, which is a relevant consideration under Comment 4.

Text of Rule 3.7

a) A lawyer shall not act as an advocate in an adversarial proceeding in which the lawyer is likely to be a necessary witness except where:
   1. the testimony relates to an uncontested issue;
   2. the testimony relates to the nature and value of legal services rendered in the case; or
   3. disqualification of the lawyer would work substantial hardship on the client.

b) If, after undertaking employment in contemplated or pending litigation, a lawyer learns or it is obvious that the lawyer may be called as a witness other than on behalf of the client, the lawyer may continue the representation until it is apparent that the testimony is or may be prejudicial to the client.

c) A lawyer may act as advocate in an adversarial proceeding in which another lawyer in the lawyer's firm is likely to be called as witness unless precluded from doing so by Rule 1.7 or 1.9.

Comment

[1] Combining the roles of advocate and witness can prejudice the opposing party and can involve a conflict of interest between the lawyer and client.

[2] The opposing party has proper objection where the combination of roles may prejudice that party's rights in the litigation. A witness is required to testify on the basis of personal knowledge, while an advocate is expected to explain and comment on evidence given by others. It may not be clear whether a statement by an advocate-witness should be taken as proof or as an analysis of the proof.

[3] Paragraph (a)(1) recognizes that if the testimony will be uncontested, the ambiguities in the dual role are purely theoretical. Paragraph (a)(2) recognizes that where the testimony concerns the extent and value of legal services rendered in the action in which the testimony is offered, permitting the lawyers to testify avoids the need for a second trial with new counsel to resolve that issue. Moreover, in such a situation the judge has firsthand knowledge of the matter in issue; hence, there is less dependence on the adversary process to test the credibility of the testimony.

[4] Apart from these two exceptions, paragraph (a)(3) recognizes that a balancing is required between the interests of the client and those of the opposing party. Whether the opposing party is likely to suffer prejudice depends on the nature of the case, the importance and probable tenor of the lawyer's testimony, and the probability that the lawyer's testimony will conflict with that of other witnesses. Even if there is risk of such prejudice, in determining whether the lawyer should be disqualified, due regard must be given to the effect of disqualification on the lawyer's client. It is relevant that one or both parties could reasonably foresee that the lawyer would probably be a witness. The principle of imputed disqualification stated in Rule 1.10 has no application to this aspect of the problem.

[5] ABA Model Rule Comments not adopted.

[6] Whether the combination of roles involves an improper conflict of interest with respect to the client is determined by Rule 1.7 or 1.9. For example, if there is likely to be substantial conflict between the testimony of the client and that of the lawyer or a member of the lawyer's firm, the representation is improper. The problem can arise whether the lawyer is called as a witness on behalf of the client or is called by the opposing party. Where a lawyer may be called as a witness other than on behalf of the client, paragraph (b) allows the lawyer to continue representation until it becomes apparent that the testimony may be prejudicial to the client. Determining whether or not such a conflict exists is primarily the responsibility of the lawyer involved. See Comment to Rule 1.7. If a lawyer who is a member of a firm may not act as both advocate and witness by reason of conflict of interest, Rule 1.10 disqualifies the firm also.

QUESTION #14

Answer: C. Under Rule 1.9(a), a lawyer who has formerly represented a client cannot subsequently represent another person in the same or a substantially related matter in which that person's interests are materially adverse to the interests of the former client unless the lawyer consults with both the present and former clients and thereafter receives their consent to the new representation. Here, while both are personal injury lawsuits, the former representation is not substantially related to the new representation. Therefore, Lenny may represent John Scranton and does not need to obtain Scranton's or Schrute Farms' consent to do so.

Text of Rule 1.9

a) A lawyer who has formerly represented a client in a matter shall not thereafter represent another person in the same or a substantially related matter in which that person's interests are materially adverse to the interests of the former client unless both the present and former client consent after consultation.
b) A lawyer shall not knowingly represent a person in the same or a substantially related matter in which a firm with which the lawyer formerly was associated had previously represented a client:
    1. whose interests are materially adverse to that person; and
    2. about whom the lawyer had acquired information protected by Rules 1.6 and 1.9(c) that is material to the matter;

unless both the present and former client consent after consultation.

c) A lawyer who has formerly represented a client in a matter or whose present or former firm has formerly represented a client in a matter shall not thereafter:
    1. use information relating to or gained in the course of the representation to the disadvantage of the former client except as Rule 1.6 or Rule 3.3 would permit or require with respect to a client, or when the information has become generally known; or
    2. reveal information relating to the representation except as Rule 1.6 or Rule 3.3 would permit or require with respect to a client.

QUESTION #15

Answer: A. Anne should report the woman's fraud. While this was not an improper communication under Rule 4.2, even if it were, Anne has a duty to report such fraudulent conduct under Rule 3.3(d). However, Anne did not engage in any improper communication for several reasons. First, when Anne spoke with the woman about the weather, Anne did not know that the woman was a represented party in the matter. Second, when Anne overheard that the woman was knowingly pursuing fraudulent claims, she was not actually communicating with the woman. She merely overheard this exchange. Further, she immediately walked away to prevent hearing more.

Text of Rule 4.2

In representing a client, a lawyer shall not communicate about the subject of the representation with a person the lawyer knows to be represented by another lawyer in the matter, unless the lawyer has the consent of the other lawyer or is authorized by law to do so.

Text of Rule 3.3

a) A lawyer shall not knowingly:
    1. make a false statement of fact or law to a tribunal;
    2. fail to disclose a fact to a tribunal when disclosure is necessary to avoid assisting a criminal or fraudulent act by the client;
    3. fail to disclose to the tribunal controlling legal authority in the subject jurisdiction known to the lawyer to be adverse to the position of the client and not disclosed by opposing counsel; or
    4. offer evidence that the lawyer knows to be false. If a lawyer has offered material evidence and comes to know of its falsity, the lawyer shall take reasonable remedial measures.
b) A lawyer may refuse to offer evidence that the lawyer reasonably believes is false.
c) In an ex parte proceeding, a lawyer shall inform the tribunal of all material facts known to the lawyer which will enable the tribunal to make an informed decision, whether or not the facts are adverse.
d) A lawyer who receives information clearly establishing that a person other than a client has perpetrated a fraud upon the tribunal in a proceeding in which the lawyer is representing a client shall promptly reveal the fraud to the tribunal.

e) The duties stated in paragraphs (a) and (d) continue until the conclusion of the proceeding, and apply even if compliance requires disclosure of information protected by Rule 1.6.

QUESTION #16

Answer: C. Rule 8.3 (a) imposes a duty upon lawyers to report misconduct. At the hearing, Tom was prepared and argued competently. His appearance, while perhaps not the most professional, does not raise a substantial question as to his honesty, trustworthiness, or fitness to practice law. Under Rule 8.3(a), inappropriate drinking is not reportable conduct. A lawyer must have committed a violation of the Rules of Professional conduct. Rule 8.4 lists behavior that constitutes misconduct under the rules. Such conduct is reportable. The comments that Bob overhead Tom's old roommate make are not reliable. The night that the roommate describes, if true, was not necessarily the night before the hearing that Bob observed. At this point, Bob does not have a reasonable basis to report Tom any professional authority.

Text of Rule 8.3

a) A lawyer having reliable information that another lawyer has committed a violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct that raises a substantial question as to that lawyer's honesty, trustworthiness or fitness to practice law shall inform the appropriate professional authority.
b) A lawyer having reliable information that a judge has committed a violation of applicable rules of judicial conduct that raises a substantial question as to the judge's fitness for office shall inform the appropriate authority.
c) If a lawyer serving as a third party neutral receives reliable information during the dispute resolution process that another lawyer has engaged in misconduct which the lawyer would otherwise be required to report but for its confidential nature, the lawyer shall attempt to obtain the parties' written agreement to waive confidentiality and permit disclosure of such information to the appropriate professional authority.
d) This Rule does not require disclosure of information otherwise protected by Rule 1.6 or information gained by a lawyer or judge who is a member of an approved lawyer's assistance program, or who is a trained intervenor or volunteer for such a program or committee, or who is otherwise cooperating in a particular assistance effort, when such information is obtained for the purposes of fulfilling the recognized objectives of the program.
e) A lawyer shall inform the Virginia State Bar if:
    1. the lawyer has been disciplined by a state or federal disciplinary authority, agency or court in any state, U.S. territory, or the District of Columbia, for a violation of rules of professional conduct in that jurisdiction;
    2. the lawyer has been convicted of a felony in a state, U.S. territory, District of Columbia, or federal court;
    3. the lawyer has been convicted of either a crime involving theft, fraud, extortion, bribery or perjury, or an attempt, solicitation or conspiracy to commit any of the foregoing offenses, in a state, U.S. territory, District of Columbia, or federal court.

4. The reporting required by paragraph (e) of this Rule shall be made in writing to the Clerk of the Disciplinary System of the Virginia State Bar not later than 60 days following entry of any final order or judgment of conviction or discipline.

Comment

[1] Self-regulation of the legal profession requires that members of the profession initiate disciplinary investigation when they know of a violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct. Lawyers have a similar obligation with respect to judicial misconduct. An apparently isolated violation may indicate a pattern of misconduct that only a disciplinary investigation can uncover. Reporting a violation is especially important where the victim is unlikely to discover the offense.

[2] A report about misconduct is not required where it would involve violation of Rule 1.6. See Rule 1.6(c)(3).

[3] If a lawyer were obliged to report every violation of the Rules, the failure to report any violation would itself be a professional offense. Such a requirement existed in many jurisdictions but proved to be unenforceable. This Rule limits the reporting obligation to those offenses that a self-regulating profession must vigorously endeavor to prevent. A measure of judgment is, therefore, required in complying with the provisions of this Rule. The term "substantial" refers to the seriousness of the possible offense and not the quantum of evidence of which the lawyer is aware. A report should be made to the bar disciplinary agency unless some other agency, such as a peer review agency, is more appropriate in the circumstances. Similar considerations apply to the reporting of judicial misconduct.

[3a] In court-related dispute resolution proceedings, a third party neutral cannot disclose any information exchanged or observations regarding the conduct and demeanor of the parties and their counsel during the proceeding. Mediation sessions are covered by another statute, which is less restrictive, covering "any communication made in or in connection with the mediation which relates to the controversy being mediated." Thus a lawyer serving as a mediator or third party neutral may not be able to discharge his or her obligation to report the misconduct of another lawyer if the reporting lawyer's information is based on information protected as confidential under the statutes. However, both statutes permit the parties to agree in writing to waive confidentiality.

[3b] The Rule requires a third party neutral lawyer to attempt to obtain the parties' written consent to waive confidentiality as to professional misconduct, so as to permit the lawyer to reveal information regarding another lawyer's misconduct which the lawyer would otherwise be required to report.

[4] The duty to report professional misconduct does not apply to a lawyer retained to represent a lawyer or judge whose professional conduct is in question. Such a situation is governed by the rules applicable to the client-lawyer relationship.

[5] Information about a lawyer's or judge's misconduct or fitness may be received by a lawyer in the course of that lawyer's participation in or cooperation with an approved lawyers or judges assistance program. In that circumstance, providing for the confidentiality of such information encourages lawyers and judges to seek treatment through such program. Conversely, without such confidentiality, lawyers and judges may hesitate to seek assistance from these programs, which may then result in additional harm to their professional careers and additional injury to the welfare of clients and the public. The duty to report, therefore, does not apply to a lawyer who is participating in or cooperating with an approved lawyer assistance program such as the Virginia Bar Association's Committee on Substance Abuse and who learns of the confidences and secrets of another lawyer who is the object of a particular assistance effort when such information is obtained for the purpose of fulfilling the recognized objectives of the program. Such confidences and secrets are to be protected to the same extent as the confidences and secrets of a lawyer's client in order to promote the purposes of the assistance program. On the other hand, a lawyer who receives such information would nevertheless be required to comply with the Rule 8.3 reporting provisions to report misconduct if the impaired lawyer or judge indicates an intent to engage in illegal activity, for example, the conversion of client funds to personal use.

[6] The duty of a lawyer to self-report a criminal conviction or professional discipline under paragraph (e) of this rule is triggered only after the conviction or decision has become final. Whether an offense is a felony shall be governed by the state, U.S. territory, District of Columbia or federal law under which the conviction is obtained. Thus, it is possible that an offense in another jurisdiction may be a misdemeanor crime for which there is no duty to self-report, even though under Virginia law the offense is a felony.

Text of Rule 8.4

It is professional misconduct for a lawyer to:

a) violate or attempt to violate the Rules of Professional Conduct, knowingly assist or induce another to do so, or do so through the acts of another;
b) commit a criminal or deliberately wrongful act that reflects adversely on the lawyer's honesty, trustworthiness or fitness to practice law;
c) engage in conduct involving dishonesty, fraud, deceit or misrepresentation which reflects adversely on the lawyer's fitness to practice law;
d) state or imply an ability to influence improperly or upon irrelevant grounds any tribunal, legislative body, or public official;
e) knowingly assist a judge or judicial officer in conduct that is a violation of applicable rules of judicial conduct or other law; or
f) enter into an agreement with a client or former client limiting or purporting to limit the right of the client or former client to file or pursue any complaint before a lawyer regulatory or disciplinary authority.

Special Techniques to Defend Virginia Cases: Pleas in Bar

I. What is a Plea in Bar?

A plea in bar, sometimes referred to as a special plea in modern jurisprudence, is a responsive defensive pleading that alleges a single state of facts or circumstances which, if proven, constitutes an absolute defense to the claim. Nelms v. Nelms, 236 Va. 281, 289 (1988); Rule 3:8(a) of the Rules of the Supreme Court of Virginia.

Other names for the plea in bar under the system of common law pleading included:

- Special plea
- Peremptory pleas
- Pleas to the action
- Pleas to the merits
- Pleas to the issue
- Issuable pleas

14B Michie's Jurisprudence § 45. As these names suggest, the plea in bar, unlike a demurrer, does not assert some legal insufficiency in the offensive pleading, but instead asserts that some other dispositive point renders those allegations irrelevant. Cal. Condo Ass'n v. Peterson, 301 Va. 14 (2022).

The plea has the effect of shortening the litigation by reducing it to a distinct issue of fact which, if proven, creates a bar to the plaintiff's right of recovery. Tomlin v. McKenzie, 251 Va. 478, 480 (1996). A plea in bar offers a unique opportunity for a defendant to short-circuit litigation by proving a disputed issue of fact before trial on the merits of the plaintiff's case in chief.[1]

As the Supreme Court of Virginia helpfully laid out in a recent opinion:

> A plea in bar serves a unique function in our adversarial system. In one sense, it is wholly unlike a demurrer, which merely "'tests the legal sufficiency of' the [1] But be aware that the Court has discretion to delay resolution on the plea until the trial on the merits. Ferguson Enters., Inc. v. F.H. Fury Plumbing, Heating ~ Air Conditioning, 297 Va. 539, 549 (2019) ("While a plea in bar is generally heard pre-trial, it is not always necessary that it be. Also, there is no requirement that a separate hearing be held . . . ."); see Tidewater Constr. Corp. v. Duke, 210 Va. 143, 147 (1969) ("[T]he cause of action on the merits [shall] be consolidated for trial with defendants' special plea").

> allegations in a complaint," and in modern practice, "a plea in bar does not point out the legal insufficiency of allegations but rather demonstrates their irrelevance because of some other dispositive point—usually some affirmative defense such as the 'statute of limitations, res judicata, collateral estoppel by judgment, accord and satisfaction, or statute of frauds.'"
> But in another sense, a plea in bar is partly like a demurrer. A plea in bar can raise an affirmative defense targeting solely the allegations of the complaint (assumed arguendo to be true), thus obviating any need for an evidentiary hearing.

Cal. Condo. Ass'n, 301 Va. at 20-21 (citations omitted).

II. The History of the Plea in Bar

The plea in bar is a relic of common law pleading, a system largely abolished in most states due to the unwieldy and cumbersome nature of the devices necessary to accomplish the aims of the pleadings.

Under the common law system of pleading, a defendant could usually make one of three pleadings: a plea in abatement, a demurrer, or a plea in bar. Pleas in abatement did not go to the legal sufficiency of the offensive pleading, nor to the substantive merits of the claim, but instead challenged form, time, or place of the action. 1A M.J. § 19.

Pleas in abatement were abolished in 1977 in Virginia by statute, but the defenses that could formerly only be raised by such a plea may simply be made by motion. Code § 8.01-276 ("Any defense heretofore required or permitted to be made by plea in abatement may be made by written motion stating specifically the relief demanded and the grounds therefor. Except when the ground of such motion is the lack of the court's jurisdiction over the person of an indispensable party, or of the subject matter of the litigation, such motion shall be made within the time prescribed by Rules of the Supreme Court. If the motion challenges the venue of the action, the movant shall state therein why venue is improperly laid and what place or places within the Commonwealth would constitute proper venue for the action."). As one commentator notes: "The 1977 statute only removed ancient procedural clogs and gave a modern, simple written motion in place of the traditional, formal written plea." Friends Virginia Pleading and Practice, § 8.01(6).

The demurrer, in contrast, accepts as true the factual allegations of the offensive pleading, instead challenging the "legal sufficiency of facts alleged in pleadings." Seymour v. Roanoke Cnty. Bd. of Supervisors, 301 Va. 156, 164. The sole question presented by a demurrer is whether the offensive pleading states a cause of action. See Welding v. Bland Cnty. Serv. Auth., 261 Va. 218 (2001). At common law, the demurrer came in three flavors: the demurrer to the evidence, the general demurrer, and the special demurrer. Demurrers to the evidence have been abolished and replaced with the familiar motion to strike the evidence. Code § 8.01-276. Special demurrers attacked pleadings for issues of form and have similarly been abolished. See Code § 8.01-275; Friends Virginia Pleadings and Practice, § 8.01(8).

The plea in bar came in two flavors: the general plea and the special plea. The general plea denied some fact that the plaintiff was required to prove, Burks Pleading and Practice, § 216, while the special plea raised some new issue that defeated the plaintiff's claim, but which the plaintiff was not required to prove, Virginia Civil Procedure § 9.8. General pleas have been abolished by Rule 3:8(a), but the special plea has survived. See generally, Doe v. Va. Church of God, CL17000049-01, 2022 Va. Cir. LEXIS 33, at *7-8 (Waynesboro Co. March 4, 2022).

III. What Can Properly Be Raised in a Plea in Bar?

There is no definitive list of facts or circumstances which are appropriate for resolution on a plea in bar. The core inquiry is whether the plea is dispositive of the plaintiffs claims and does not merely challenge the plaintiff's ability to prove an element of the case.

Some specific, and certainly non-exhaustive, examples of uncontroversial pleas in bar include issues raising the following defenses: statute of limitations,[2] res judicata, collateral estoppel by judgment, accord and satisfaction, and statute of frauds. Our Lady of Peace, Inc. v. Morgan, 297 Va. 832, 847 n.4 (2019). Judge Martin of Virginia's Fourth Judicial Circuit, in an article for the Journal of Civil Litigation, noted that the Supreme Court of Virginia has not taken issue with pleas in bar raising the statute of repose, Cooper Indu., Inc. v. Melendez, 260 Va. 578 (2000); sovereign immunity, Hawthorne v. VanMarter, 279 Va. 566 (2010); standing to bring a derivative suit, Jennings v. Kay Jennings Fam. Ltd. P'ship, 275 Va. 594 (2008); and the judgmental immunity doctrine, Shevlin Smith v. McLaughlin, 289 Va. 241 (2015).

In Nelms v. Nelms, 236 Va. 281, 289 (1988), the Supreme Court of Virginia cited with approval an equity treatise listing the following other "familiar illustrations" of the use of a plea:

- Absence of proper parties;
- Res judicata;
- Usury;
- Release;
- Award;
- Infancy;
- Bankruptcy;
- Denial of partnership;
- Bona fide purchaser.

Id. (quoting E. Meade, Lile's Equity Pleading and Practice, § 199). Other defenses certainly exist, and identifying whether or not your defense can be raised in a plea requires analysis of the facts and circumstances of your case.

Additionally, a plea in bar need not be dispositive of the entire suit. A plea in bar may go to some counts but not others, even if they arise out of the same cause of action but merely allege different theories of liability. See Shevlin Smith, 289 Va. at 252.

[2] Even if apparent on the face of a Complaint, a statute of limitations defense cannot be set up by demurrer. Rather, it "can only be raised as an affirmative defense specifically set forth in a responsive pleading." Code § 8.01-235.

In Shevlin Smith, the Court held that a plea in bar asserting that "Shevlin Smith 'did not breach the prevailing standard of care and [its] actions [were] protected by the judgmental immunity doctrine'" could have been reached by the trial court despite the fact that the plea only went to one theory of liability for legal malpractice. Id. NOTE: The Court did not hold that the plea in bar was otherwise proper; the first half of Shevlin Smith's plea in bar was likely a plea of the general issue, not permitted under Virginia law.

IV. When to Make the Plea

The defendant can make a plea in bar as a responsive pleading to a Complaint, satisfying the requirement of Rule 3:8 to respond to the Complaint with 21 days of service. Rule 3:8(a). Care should be taken, however: while a plea in bar need not be dispositive of all counts to a Complaint to be proper, a plea in bar is "deemed responsive only to the specific count or counts addressed therein." Rule 3:8(a) (emphasis added).

Questions remain, however, whether the Plea in Bar must be contained in the defendants first responsive pleading or be lost.

In Fayak v. Earl, CL2023-8795, 2023 Va. Cir. LEXIS 262 (Fairfax Co. Dec. 11, 2023), Judge Michael Devine held that Rule 3:8 requires that all responsive pleadings be filed within 21 days of service of the complaint. Id. at *5. The Court reasoned that the Rule's requirement that the defendant "must file pleadings in response within 21 days after service" contemplated that the defendant may file multiple concurrent pleadings, and that the rule provided no exceptions for later-discovered pleas. Id. at *4. Judge Devine held that the only mechanism for a defendant to file a later-discovered plea was to obtain leave to file a late pleading pursuant to Rule 1:9.

However, there are at least two circuit courts that disagree. In Carter v. Mazin Alayssami, D.M.D., P.C., 82 Va. Cir. 148, 149 (Stafford Co. 2011), and City of Chesapeake v. Thrasher, 109 Va. Cir. 149, 150 (Chesapeake City 2021), the Stafford and Chesapeake circuit courts found that the Rule contained no such requirement that every responsive pleading be filed within 21 days of service, but simply required that a responsive pleading be filed within 21 days.

In light of this circuit split, the prudent practitioner should diligently consider any possible grounds to include a plea in bar in his or her first responsive pleading.

V. Evidentiary Hearing

A unique feature of the plea in bar is the ability for the pleader to take evidence on their dispositive motion. This feature is a significant part of what makes pleas in bar so powerful. Unlike a demurrer, the plea in bar enables the defendant to rise above the one-sided factual allegations in the offensive pleading and defeat a suit prior to a full adjudication on the merits. In a jurisdiction where summary judgment is rarely entertained, the ability to adjudicate dispositive facts in a narrow, focused proceeding becomes an essential part of defending a Virginia case.

However, the defendant is not required to put on evidence in support of their plea in bar. Where the dispositive issue of fact that represents a complete bar to recovery is on the face of the offensive pleading, the defendant can submit the issue to the court for decision without an evidentiary hearing. See, e.g., Lostrangio v. Laingford, 261 Va. 495 (2001). For example, where the facts establish a named defendant's entitlement to sovereign immunity, the defendant can opt to submit the issue for the court's resolution of whether, based solely on the facts alleged in the complaint, the defendant is in fact entitled to immunity. See Massenburg v. City of Petersburg, 298 Va. 212, 216 (2019).

Whether the defendant opts to present evidence or not impacts what standard of review an appellate court will give to the Court's ruling on the plea. When the "parties present evidence on the plea ore tenus, the circuit court's [or jury's] factual findings are accorded the weight of a jury finding and will not be disturbed on appeal unless they are plainly wrong or without evidentiary support." Id. But "where no evidence is taken in support of a plea in bar, the trial court, and the appellate court upon review, consider solely the pleadings in resolving the issue presented. In doing so, the facts stated in the plaintiff's [complaint] are deemed true." Id.

VI. The Jury and the Plea in Bar

Another unique feature of the plea in bar is the ability for either party to demand, by right, that the Court empanel a jury to decide the issue of fact raised by the plea. See Code § 8.01-336; Rule 3:21; Hawthorne v. VanMarter, 279 Va. 566, 577 (2010) (holding that where the facts underlying the plea in bar are contested, a party may demand that a jury decide the factual issues raised by the plea).

In order to assert your jury demand, should you desire to have a jury, you must timely demand a jury. See Sea Bay Hotel v. Gosnell, 97 Va. Cir. 250, 254 (Fairfax Co. 2017) ("Unless waived, a jury demand consistent with Va. Sup. Ct. R. 3:21 is sufficient to preserve a jury demand without further notice."). Additionally, the demand should clearly identify the scope of the issues to be presented to the jury.

However, a jury is not available for every plea in bar, and the Supreme Court of Virginia has been clear that "[s]imply holding an evidentiary hearing does not convert all of the arguments for and against the plea in bar into factual disputes," thus "[a]n argument asserting a purely legal bar to the pleaded facts, assumed arguendo to be true, can be and should be decided in that manner—so, too, should a purely legal rejoinder to an argument offered in support of a plea in bar." Cal. Condo. Ass'n, 301 Va. at 23. The Boyd-Graves Conference has produced a report on pleas in bar which reveals approximately 10 situations where a jury hearing on a plea in bar is unavailable:

1. The parties have stipulated to all controlling facts;
2. The parties have elected not to offer evidence and will argue the plea on the basis of the pleading;
3. The parties agree to have the matter heard entirely by the Court;
4. There are no disputed facts necessary to adjudicate the legal issue raised by the plea;

5. The plea only raises issues of law;
6. Summary judgment is appropriate;
7. The plea asserts an equitable defense such as unclean hands, laches, or estoppel;
8. The plea challenges the enforceability of contractual provisions as a matter of law;
9. A party asks for a determination that a party's conduct was not grossly negligent; or
10. The plea seeks application of the principles of collateral estoppel or res judicata.

2020 Boyd-Graves Committee Report p. 85.

VII. The Burden of Proof

Who has the burden of proof on a plea in bar is a seemingly simple issue that has led to some of the more confusing cases relating to the procedure. As a general principle, the burden of proof on a plea in bar is on the party asserting that a claim is defeated by the facts or circumstances alleged. See Tomlin, 251 Va. at 480.

For most pleas in bar, this will be the prevailing standard. For the typical plea in bar asserting some affirmative defense that presents a complete bar to recovery (e.g., sovereign immunity, statute of limitations, contributory fault, usury, lack of capacity, or assumption of risk, etc.), this burden is logical and uncontroversial. This default rule runs into challenges, however, where there are burden-shifting aspects to a particular defense.

For example, in a case involving the breach of a restrictive covenant, the covenant is only enforceable if it is "no greater than necessary to protect a legitimate business interest, is not unduly harsh or oppressive in curtailing an employee's ability to earn a livelihood, and is reasonable in light of sound public policy." Modern Env'ts Inc. v. Stinnett, 263 Va. 491, 493 (2002). Can the defendant attempt to resolve the litigation by asserting that the contract is unenforceable in a plea in bar? And if so, who bears the burden of proof?

Courts are divided. Some hold that because the plaintiff bears the burden of proof, a plea in bar challenging the enforceability of the restrictive covenant is a general plea and therefore not permitted under Virginia procedure. See Ass'n Res. Grp. v. Lava Tech. Servs., No. 2023-8799, 2023 Va. Cir. LEXIS 204 (Fairfax Co. Oct. 10, 2023). Others hold that the case is amenable to a plea as it represents a discrete set of facts that is dispositive of the case, and, although it is the defendant's plea, places the burden of proof on the plaintiff. See MicroTechnologies LLC v. FedStore Corp., No. 2017-08945 (Fairfax Co. Feb. 16, 2018). Still others hold that the parties share the burden of proof with respect to specific elements of whether the covenant is enforceable. Metis Grp., Inc. v. Allison, 104 Va. Cir. 111 (Fairfax Co. 2020).

Another example of burden-shifting pleas is Schmidt v. Household Fin. Corp., II, 276 Va. 108 (2008). There, the Supreme Court of Virginia ruled that it was "apparent on the face of [the plaintiff's] pleadings that the two-year statute of limitations [for fraud claims] had expired." Id. at 117. The statute of limitations for fraud claims accrues when the fraud is discovered, or by the exercise of due diligence should have been discovered. Id. The Court held that, it being clear that two-years had expired since the date of the fraud itself, the burden then shifted to the plaintiff to prove that he could not have discovered the alleged fraud within the two-year period before he commenced the action, despite the exercise of due diligence. Id.

Other situations certainly exist, and practitioners should keep on the lookout for situations involving burden-shifting defenses when considering bringing, or defending against, a plea in bar.

VIII. Recent Supreme Court of Virginia Cases

Martin, a nursing assistant, molested and raped Gertrude, an elderly resident at Our Lady of Peace nursing home, while engaged in giving her care in her room. Id. at 837-38. Martin's job involved undressing residents, changing their undergarments and diapers, and bathing them, usually with the privacy of a curtain and closed bedroom door. Id. at 848. Gertrude was ill, partially paralyzed, and noncommunicative. Id. at 837-38.

Gertrude's estate sued Martin and the nursing home, asserting vicarious liability. Id. at 838. The nursing home filed a plea in bar challenging the respondeat superior liability claim. Id. At the hearing on this plea, only one witness testified, and she offered no testimony on the facts of the assault. Id. at 838-39. The trial court denied the plea in bar and held that Martin committed the tortious acts while he was performing duties for the nursing home. Id. at 840. Finding that the scope-of-employment issue was properly before the court on the plea, the court later clarified its earlier ruling and found that Martin's acts were committed in the course and scope of his employment. Id. at 840-41. It therefore granted a motion in limine preventing the nursing home from introducing evidence at trial challenging the respondeat superior finding. Id. at 841. At trial, the court instructed the jury that the scope-of-employment issue had already been decided, but evidence of Martin's conduct (including his confession in the criminal case) was admitted on other claims. Id. at 842. The jury returned a verdict against both defendants. Id. at 843.

The Supreme Court reversed the verdict against the nursing home. Id. at 837. It first reviewed the principles governing respondeat superior.

Under the job-related-service rule, vicarious liability may be imposed when the employee committed the tort while actively engaged in a job-related service; that is, when the service itself in which the tortious act was done was within the ordinary course of the employer's business. Id. at 844-45. Vicarious liability is not limited to those acts of the servant which promote the object of the employment, but no liability can be imposed if the tortious act did not arise out of the very transaction, or service or task, that the employee was being paid to perform. Id. (quoting Parker v. Carlion Clinic, 296 Va. 319, 336-37 (2018)). It is not enough that the claim arose out of an activity which was within the employee's scope of employment or within the ordinary course of business. Id. An employee's act is within the scope of employment if it is actuated, at least in part, by a purpose to serve the master. Id. at 845. An employee's act is not within the scope of employment when it occurs within an independent course of conduct not intended by the employee to serve any purpose of the employer. Id. at 846.

The trial court erred in deciding the scope-of-employment issue as a matter of law on the plea in bar. Id. at 846. No facts were introduced about the tort to permit such a finding, and fact findings cannot be based on the allegations in a complaint. Id.

Further, because the complaint alleged the existence of an employment relationship at the time of Martin's tort, the Estate benefits from a presumption that shifts the burden of production to the employer to present facts sufficient to permit the factfinder to conclude that the employee was not acting within the scope of his employment at the relevant time. Id. at 848. However, the burden of persuasion stays with Martin at all times, and the presumption disappears in the face of positive facts to the contrary. Id.

The Court concluded that the scope-of-the employment issue in this case was one for the jury. Id. at 848-49. This case fell between the two extremes—a bad motive accompanied by a deviation from the employer's business that is marked and unusual versus a deviation that is slight. Id. at 847. Such cases present a question of fact for the jury. Id. at 846. Here, the unique pleading presumption and the allegations in the complaint were sufficient for the issue to survive the pleading stage. Id.

Justices McCullough and McClanahan concurred. They questioned whether rape could ever be within the scope of an employee's employment. Id. at 854-55 (McCullough, J., concurring).

Justices Mims and Powell concurred in part and dissented in part. They would have found that the trial court correctly resolved the nursing home's plea in bar based on the evidence before it. Id. at 856 (Mims, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part). The nursing home elected to pursue a plea in bar and simply failed to present evidence to rebut the presumption. Id. at 857.

Cal. Condo. Ass'n v. Peterson*, 301 Va. 14 (2022)

In 2017, a condominium association filed an action against Peterson, the owner of two condominium units, for unpaid special assessments made in 2006 when Peterson and his wife owned the units. Id. at 17. The condominium owner alleged that the Condominium Declaration required payment of all outstanding assessments upon conveyance of the condominium unit, which had occurred in 2016 when the property was conveyed to Peterson (by his wife) in connection with their divorce. Id. at 18-19.

Peterson filed a plea in bar asserting that the action was barred by the 36-month statute of limitations in former Code § 55-79.84(D). Id. at 18. At a hearing on the plea in bar, the condominium association presented testimony from several witnesses, but did not introduce into evidence any exhibits or the Declaration that supported its claim that the statute of limitation began to run in 2016 when the property was conveyed to Peterson. Id. at 18-19. Finding that the association failed to introduce the Declaration into evidence, the circuit court granted the plea in bar and dismissed the action. Id. at 19.The condominium owner appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed. Id. at 17. The Court held it was unnecessary for the condominium association to introduce the Declaration into evidence at the plea in bar hearing. Id. at 22. Under Rule 1:4(i), a pleader's "mention in a pleading of an accompanying exhibit, of itself and without more, makes such exhibit a part of the pleading." Id. The Declaration was "Exhibit 1" to the Association's amended complaint and was specifically referred to by the allegations of the complaint. Id. The same is true of the 2016 conveyance deed as well as the settlement statement at closing. Id. These documents were before the circuit court because Peterson stipulated that his plea in bar assumed the "factual allegations" in the amended complaint. Id. Further, there is no need to offer evidence at an evidentiary hearing on issues that involve disputes of law concerning undisputed facts alleged in the complaint. Id. at 22-23.

The Supreme Court declined to reach the merits Of the statute of limitations question for the first time on appeal. Id. at 23. Instead, it remanded the case to the circuit court with instructions to consider the exhibits to the association's amended complaint and to rule on the association's argument that the conveyance provision of the Declaration created an independent right of action accruing on the 2016 date of conveyance. Id.

Managing Unruly Witnesses Before and During Trial

General Introduction:

This presentation is focused on the great advantages that arise when attorneys stay calm, professional, and kind throughout high-stakes litigation. We live in extraordinary times where members of the legal community sometimes conflate zealous advocacy with being overly aggressive. However, the rules of civil procedure and ethical rules governing Virginia lawyers require attorneys to maintain decorum and professionalism at all times. This presentation focuses on how to successfully advocate for your client when dealing with unruly witnesses and, in some instances, unprofessional opposing counsel. Although this presentation is focused on witnesses, attorneys can and should apply the same principles of civility to dealing with any uncooperative person in the litigation landscape, whether it is another attorney, a party to a matter, or a public official. This presentation will remind all participants of the success that can arise when – in the face of unreasonableness – we keep calm and stay cool.

I. Uncooperative Witness During Deposition

a. Discovery Sanctions Generally: FED. R. CIV. P. 30(d)(2): Depositions by Oral Examination: Sanction. "The court may impose an appropriate sanction – including the reasonable expenses and attorney's fees incurred by any party – on a person who impedes, delays, or frustrates the fair examination of the deponent."

i. Sanctionable Actions.

1. A court has the authority to issue sanctions on any party that (1) impedes, (2) delays, or (3) frustrates the fair examination of the deponent. FED. R. CIV. P. 30(d)(2).

2. Rule 30(d)(2) is broad in scope. Parties may invoke this rule when an opposing party attempts to use too much time for depositions. See Nankivil v. Lockheed Martin Corp., 216 F.R.D. 689, 691 (M.D. Fla. 2003) (where an individual's request for extra depositions was denied because the individual had not supplied adequate reason to exceed time limits and number of depositions allowed).

a. FED. R. CIV. P. 30(d)(2) advisory committee notes to the 1993 amendments: Paragraph (3) authorizes appropriate sanctions.

i. Sanctions are appropriate when a deposition is unreasonably prolonged, and when an attorney engages in practices that improperly frustrate the fair examination of the deponent, such as making improper objections or giving prohibited directions not to answer.

ii. In general, counsel should not engage in any conduct during a deposition that would not be allowed in the presence of a judicial officer. The making of an excessive number of unnecessary objections, the refusal of an attorney to agree with other counsel on a fair apportionment of time, or a refusal to agree to a reasonable request for some additional time to complete a deposition may all be grounds for sanctions.

3. Improper suspension of deposition may be sanctionable. See Pioneer Drive, LLC v. Nissan Diesel Am., Inc. 262 F.R.D. 552, 556-57 (D. Mont. 2009) (corporation impeded depositions by stopping depositions until professional videographer arrived when LLC was entitled to have counsel videotape by earlier agreement); Rangel v. Masaro, 274 F.R.D. 585, 591-92 (S.D. Tex. 2011) (defendant entitled to sanctions because plaintiff's counsel improperly ended deposition of plaintiff).

4. Inappropriate conduct by the witness or attorney:

a. In Almeida-Graves v. SeaWorld Parks & Ent. LLC, a federal court awarded monetary sanctions against the witness. The court cited the witness's behavior as an alternate basis for excluding the witness from trial as a sanction. See generally 2024 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 46488 (E.D. Va. 2024). In the court's order regarding the sanctions, the court noted that the expert, Martin:

i. Engaged in hostile and uncivil conduct toward Defendant's counsel and others present at the deposition; id. at 11; and

ii. Delayed and impeded the deposition by interrupting defense counsel's questioning, making his own objections, refusing to answer routine questions, and providing uncooperative answers. Id.

iii. While defense counsel noted Mr. Martin's track record of dishonesty, the court did not award sanctions on that basis. The court seemed to give him some leeway due to his alleged recent medical diagnosis. Id. at 13-14.

iv. Courts generally impose the lowest sanction possible to enforce the rules and procedures. FED. RULES OF CIV. P. 11(c)(4) illustrates this: Sanctions "must be limited to what suffices to deter repetition of the conduct or comparable conduct by others similarly situated."

b. GMAC Bank v. HTFC Corp., 248 F.R.D. 182 (E.D. Pa. 2008). Court sanctioned a witness for delay and impeding the deposition because the witness cursed, made insulting comments to questioning counsel, and was extremely rude during the entire deposition. The counsel that brought the witness was also sanctioned for not taking steps to control the witness. See generally id.

5. VA. SUP. CT. R. 4:12(b)(1): Sanctions by Court in County or City Where Deposition Is Taken. If a deponent fails to be sworn or to answer a question after being directed to do so by the court in the county or city in which the deposition is being taken, the failure may be considered a contempt of that court.

a. Counsel should educate their witness that if ordered, the witness must answer the question or respond adequately or else be subject to contempt.

b. Rule 4:12's sanctions for violation of a discovery order do not apply until an order has been entered and violated. Travis v. Finley, 548 S.E.2d 906, 910 (Va. 2001).

ii. Types of Sanctions Awarded: FED. RULES OF CIV. P. 30(d)(2) does not define or suggest what "appropriate sanctions" might be except for stating that an appropriate sanction may include the reasonable expenses and attorney's fees incurred by any party.

1. Time: Courts have wide discretion in determining sanctions. In NXIVM Corp. v. O'Hara, a court granted party an extra day to depose a witness under Rule 30(d)(2). 241 F.R.D. 109, 144

(N.D.N.Y. 2007), See also Roberson v. Blair, 242 F.R.D. 130, 138-39 (D.D.C. 2007) (defendant granted extra seven hours to depose witness because plaintiff's deposition could have been more efficient).

2. Terminating Deposition: In C&F Packing Co. v. Doskocil Cos., a court order terminating a deposition was an appropriate sanction. One party disregarded a court's ordered deposition by unilaterally adjourning the ordered deposition in favor of conducting a separate deposition which was not an emergency, not subject of a court order, and had been rescheduled for the same day without notice. The trial court determined that the acting party had lost its chance to continue the court ordered deposition and terminated it. See 126 F.R.D. 662, 674 (N.D. Ill. 1992).

3. Judge's Extensive Discretion: Prohibiting an attorney from participating in additional depositions in a case is an available sanction under FED. R. CIV. P. 30(d)(2). See Howard v. Offshore Liftboats, LLC, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 79223, 10 (E.D. La. Mar. 4, 2015) (sanctioned attorney challenged magistrate judge's order prohibiting him from participating in further depositions as not a remedy available under 30(d)(2); on appeal, the district court affirmed, stating that judges have extensive discretion to determine what sanction is appropriate).

iii. Who may be sanctioned

1. FED. RULES OF CIV. PRO. 30(d)(2) "authorizes the court to impose an appropriate sanction on any person responsible for an impediment that frustrated the fair examination of the deponent. This could include the deponent, any party, or any other person involved in the deposition." FED. R. CIV. P. 30, advisory committee notes to the 2000 amendments.

2. A court can issue sanctions on any party, including lawyers, witnesses, and parties to the action. For a case in which an attorney was sanctioned, see Higginbotham v. KCS Int'l, Inc., 202 F.R.D. 444, 445 (D. Md. 2001) (court sanctioned attorney for retaliating by advising his witness to leave the deposition early after opposing counsel had done the same several weeks earlier, on top of many unprofessional communications).

3. In GMAC Bank v. HTFC Corp., both the deponent witness and his attorney were sanctioned, and both under the same rule, FED. R. CIV. P. 30(d)(2). The witness was sanctioned for his actions and statements that led to delay and impediment of the deposition. 248

F.R.D. 182, 193-94 (E.D. Pa. 2008). The attorney was sanctioned for his inaction in controlling his witness. See id. at 194-97.

b. When Your Witness is Being Uncooperative.

i. Duty to intercede or correct witness's objectionable conduct.

1. In GMAC Bank v. HTFC Corp., the court found an attorney violated this rule by not controlling his witness. See generally 248 F.R.D. 182.

a. An attorney may be blindsided by a "recalcitrant" client or witness "who engages in unexpected sanctionable conduct at a deposition." Id. at 195. "An attorney faced with such a client cannot, however, simply sit back, allow the deposition to proceed, and then blame the [witness] when the deposition process breaks down." Id.

2. It is when animosity and emotions are high that the rules are most important. See Redwood v. Dobson, 476 F.3d 462, 469-70 (7th Cir. 2007).

3. In a case Gentry Locke handled, Almeida-Graves v. SeaWorld Parks & Ent. LLC, the opposing counsel's witness, Kenneth Martin, was extremely uncooperative. He banged on the table, knocking over the videographer's equipment, and constantly refused to answer standard deposition questions. Opposing counsel did very little to control him. See generally 2024 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 46488 (E.D. Va. Feb. 16, 2024). For the sake of time and the rules, the best thing for the opposing counsel to do would have been to take a break, calm Mr. Martin, and instruct him of the rules and that he may be subject to sanctions if he does not behave, and tell him to cooperate.

ii. Be careful not to stop the deposition early on a whim. See generally Rangel, 274 F.R.D. 585 (if an attorney improperly stops a deposition, he or she may be found in violation of Rule 30(d)(2)'s requirement against delay or impediments, and sanctioned accordingly).

iii. VA. RULES OF PRO. CONDUCT:

1. RULE 3.5(f): "A lawyer shall not . . . engage in conduct intended to disrupt a tribunal." "Tribunal" is not defined in the Virginia rules, but it is in the ABA Model Rules. ABA Model Rules of Pro. Conduct, r. 3.3, Comment (1). That definition specifically includes depositions in the meaning of "tribunal."

2. RULE 4.4(a): "In representing a client, a lawyer shall not use means that have no substantial purpose other than to embarrass, delay, or burden a third person, or use methods of obtaining evidence that violate the legal rights of such a person."

c. When an Opposing Witness is Being Uncooperative

i. Stay calm; don't lash out. In Almeida-Graves v. SeaWorld Parks & Ent. LLC, defense counsel stayed calm with Kenneth Martin, even though Martin made derogatory comments regarding her sex, education, and general demeanor. Defense counsel kept composure throughout the entire deposition, persevered, did not stop the deposition, and made the best of important evidentiary information she could get from an unpleasant deponent. See generally 2024 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 46488 (E.D. Va. Feb. 16, 2024).

1. VA. RULE OF PRO. CONDUCT PREAMBLE: "A lawyer should use the law's procedures only for legitimate purposes and not to harass or intimidate others. A lawyer should demonstrate respect for the legal system and for those who serve it, including judges, other lawyers and public officials."

2. VA. RULES OF PRO. CONDUCT, R. 3.4(g): Fairness to Opposing Party and Counsel: "A lawyer shall not . . . [i]ntentionally or habitually violate any established rule of procedure or of evidence, where such conduct is disruptive of the proceedings."

a. Comment 8: Even when ill feeling exists between opposing clients, that "ill feeling should not influence a lawyer's conduct, attitude or demeanor towards opposing counsel. A lawyer should not make unfair or derogatory personal reference to opposing counsel. Haranguing and offensive tactics by lawyers interfere with the orderly administration of justice and have no proper place in our legal system."

b. Examples as discussed above: Improperly designating depositions, lengthy and convoluted objections during depositions, inability to resolve discovery related problems before trial, over-designating exhibits/discovery materials, contesting authenticity of documentary evidence without any basis to do so (i.e., just to force the other side to subpoena records custodians), etc., are examples of conduct that lawyers should avoid.

ii. If you can get client's authorization, use a videographer during deposition.

1. The video keeps a record for a court determining sanctions.

2. The video may be used at trial in place of a live witness if the situation demands it and the court allows it.

3. A video may amplify just how bad a bad actor's behavior was during a deposition.

iii. VA. RULES OF PRO. CONDUCT, R. 3.5(f): "A lawyer should not engage in conduct intended to disrupt a tribunal."

1. Comment 4 (in part): "The advocate's function is to present evidence and arguments so that the cause may be decided according to law. Refraining from abusive or obstreperous conduct is a corollary of the advocate's right to speak on behalf of litigants."

iv. VA. RULES OF PRO. CONDUCT, R. 8.3(a): Reporting Misconduct. "A lawyer having reliable information that another lawyer has committed a violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct that raises a substantial question as to that lawyer's honesty, trustworthiness or fitness to practice law shall inform the appropriate professional authority."

1. If an attorney believes that the counsel to the opposing witness is violating a Rule of Professional Conduct, he or she may report them. However, unless the violation calls the other attorney's honesty, trustworthiness, or fitness into question, an attorney is not required to report the misconduct. See VA. RULES PRO. CONDUCT, R. 8.3, Comment (3).

II. Sanctions Motions and Attorneys' Obligations Regarding Uncooperative Witnesses

a. Generally:

i. VA. SUP. CT. R. 4:12(b)(2): Failure to Make Discovery; Sanctions: Failure to Comply with Order, Sanctions by Court in which Action is Pending.

1. If a relevant person fails to obey an order to provide or permit discovery, the court in which the action is pending may make such orders in regard to the failure as are just, and among others the following:

(A) An order that the facts or matters related to the order will be taken as established;

(B) An order refusing to allow the disobedient party to take a position on the designated claims or defenses, or prohibiting the disobedient party from introducing designated materials into evidence;

(C) An order striking out pleadings or parts of pleadings, or staying further proceedings until the order is obeyed, or dismissing the action or proceeding or any part thereof, or rendering a judgment by default against the disobedient party;

(D) Instead of or in addition to any of the foregoing orders, a court may enter an order treating a party's failure to obey as contempt of court;

(E) Where a party has failed to comply with an order under Rule 4:10(a) requiring him to produce another witness for examination, such orders as are listed in paragraphs (A), (B), and (C) of this subdivision, unless the party failing to comply shows that he is unable to produce such person for examination.

In lieu of any of the orders mentioned in this rule, or in addition thereto, the court must require the party failing to obey the order, or the attorney advising him, or both, to pay the reasonable expenses, including attorney fees, caused by the failure, unless the court finds that the failure was substantially justified or that other circumstances make an award of expenses unjust. VA. SUP. CT. R. 4:12(b)(2) (subparagraphs (A)-(D) paraphrased for clarity and brevity).

ii. FED. R. CIV. P. 11(b)-(c). Representations to the Court; Sanctions.

(b) Representations to the Court. By presenting to the court a pleading, written motion, or other paper—whether by signing, filing, submitting, or later advocating it—an attorney or unrepresented party certifies that to the best of the person's knowledge, information, and belief, formed after an inquiry reasonable under the circumstances:

(1) it is not being presented for any improper purpose, such as to harass, cause unnecessary delay, or needlessly increase the cost of litigation;

(2) the claims, defenses, and other legal contentions are warranted by existing law or by a nonfrivolous argument for extending, modifying, or reversing existing law or for establishing new law;

(3) the factual contentions have evidentiary support or, if specifically so identified, will likely have evidentiary support after a reasonable opportunity for further investigation or discovery; and

(4) the denials of factual contentions are warranted on the evidence or, if specifically so identified, are reasonably based on belief or a lack of information.

(c) Sanctions

(1) In General. If after notice and a reasonable opportunity to respond, the court determines that Rule 11(b) has been violated, the court may impose an appropriate sanction on any attorney, law firm, or party that violated the rule or is responsible for the violation. Absent exceptional circumstances, a law firm must be held jointly responsible for a violation committed by its partner, associate, or employee.

b. When Your Witness is Being Uncooperative at Trial:

i. VA. RULES OF PRO. CONDUCT, R. 3.3: Candor to the Tribunal.

(a) "[A] lawyer shall not knowingly . . . (2) fail to disclose a fact to a tribunal when disclosure is necessary to avoid assisting a criminal or fraudulent act by the client . . . (4) offer evidence that the lawyer knows to be false. If a lawyer has offered material evidence and comes to know of its falsity, the lawyer shall take reasonable remedial measures."

(d) "A lawyer who receives information clearly establishing that a person other than a client has perpetrated a fraud upon the tribunal in a proceeding in which the lawyer is representing a client shall promptly reveal the fraud to the tribunal."

ii. VA. RULES OF PRO. CONDUCT, R. 3.4: Fairness to Opposing Party and Counsel. A lawyer shall not:

(a) Obstruct another party's access to evidence or alter, destroy or conceal a document or other material having potential evidentiary value for the purpose of obstructing a party's access to evidence. A lawyer shall not counsel or assist another person to do any such act.

(e) Make a frivolous discovery request or fail to make reasonably diligent effort to comply with a legally proper discovery request by an opposing party.

(h) Request a person other than a client to refrain from voluntarily giving relevant information to another party unless:

(1) the information is relevant in a pending civil matter;

(2) the person in a civil matter is a relative or a current or former employee or other agent of a client; and

(3) the lawyer reasonably believes the person's interest will not be adversely affected by refraining from giving such information.

iii. VA. RULES OF PRO. CONDUCT, R. 4.4(a): Respect for Rights of Third Persons.

1. "In representing a client, a lawyer shall not use means that have no substantial purpose other than to embarrass, delay, or burden a third person, or use methods of obtaining evidence that violate the legal rights of such a person."

2. Comment 1 (in part): "Responsibility to a client requires a lawyer to subordinate the interests of others to those of the client, but that responsibility does not imply that a lawyer may disregard the rights of third persons."

c. When an Opposing Witness is Being Uncooperative on Cross Examination:

i. Sidebar Behavior.

1. "Sidebar behavior" refers to a quiet discussion between counsel of all parties and the judge. It occurs in open court without excusing the jury, but the jury cannot hear the discussion.

2. Sidebar conferences may be on or off the record depending on the jurisdiction.

3. While sidebar conferences are preferable to speaking objections, many judges encourage counsel to instead discuss anticipated objections before the trial day begins or during a recess. THE U.S. DISTRICT COURT SPEAKS § 3.3.2 (Mass. Continuing Legal Educ., Inc. 2015).

4. Sidebars should be infrequent and requested only for good reason.

5. VA. SUP. CT. R. 2:104(b): Preliminary Determinations, Relevancy conditioned on proof of connecting facts: Whenever the relevancy of evidence depends upon proof of connecting facts, the court may admit the evidence upon or, in the court's discretion, subject to, the introduction of proof sufficient to support a finding of the connecting facts.

    a. When the decision on the admissibility of evidence requires disclosing material that may end up inadmissible, the jury should not hear that material.

    b. Arguments on admissibility in these situations should occur at sidebar or with the jury excused from the courtroom.

III. Practical Issues

a. Try to avoid sanctions motions generally.

    i. A lawyer does not want to build the reputation of being difficult to deal with and quick to pull the trigger on reporting other lawyers or their witnesses.

    ii. A lawyer may need leeway in a situation in which she or he makes a potentially sanctionable mistake. If you are too quick to report other lawyers, other lawyers may be quick to report you. Extend grace and give others the benefit of the doubt.

    iii. Be able to communicate with opposing counsel. Having an open and honest conversation with opposing counsel about the perceived sanctionable conduct may help clarify any misunderstandings and can lead an agreement regarding future conduct of the parties, witnesses, and attorneys.

    iv. If you are representing a firm with more than a few attorneys, consider a policy in which a partner or an associate must go through a sanctions committee, or something similar, before filing sanctions. A firm can gain a reputation just like an individual can.

    v. Courts do not like frivolous sanctions motions. Limit your filings of sanctions to egregious situations that you can clearly demonstrate. Otherwise, not only might your reputation in the legal community take a hit, but your credibility in the court might suffer.

b. In depositions, make sure you have a good court reporter.

c. When encountering a hostile witness or opposing counsel in a jury trial, an effective strategy is to allow the hostile witness or attorney continue their aggressive behavior or speech while you keep composed and professional. The abusive behavior will likely lead to the jury's perception of the bad actor being tainted, and the jury may hold it against him or her. If the conduct is repugnant enough, the judge may even admonish the hostile attorney or witness in front of the jury.

Privacy and Cybersecurity Compliance in the New Era of Artificial Intelligence

John G. Danyluk and Jessiah S. Hulle

Gentry Locke Seminar
September 6, 2024 – Roanoke
September 20, 2024 -- Richmond

I. What is GenAI?

A. What genAI is: "Generative AI refers to deep-learning models that can generate high-quality text, images, and other content based on the data they were trained on."[1]

   a. In other words, at the risk of over-simplification: genAI creates new content based on what it learns from reviewing curated training content.

   b. Imagine, for instance, a design company that wants to illustrate minimalist corporate logos. The company can train a genAI by showing it thousands of preexisting logos from corporations like Nike. As the genAI attempts to create its own logos based on the inputs, the company can reject or tweak outputs to help the genAI learn what makes a good logo and what makes a bad one (this is called "machine learning"). Once the genAI "learns" how to make a good logo, the company can ask the genAI to create logos with targeted prompts, like: "Draw a company logo for a hunting supplies store. Use a duck in the design."

B. GenAI differs from "traditional" AI. Traditional AI analyzes data, finds patterns, and makes predictions. It appears in a lot of phone applications; think autocorrect and autofill on search engines. In contrast, genAI analyzes data, finds pattern, and actually creates new content from that data.[2]

C. GenAI has been around for a while, but in the last year or two its capabilities and notoriety has increased exponentially, especially following the release of ChatGPT.

[2] https://www.forbes.com/sites/bernardmarr/2023/07/24/the-difference-between-generative-ai-and-traditional-ai-an-easy-explanation-for-anyone/

a. For a primer on the capabilities of genAI now versus a few years ago, compare a notable piece of genAI-generated art from 2018, Edmond de Belamy,[3] with a notable piece from 2023, Théâtre D'opéra Spatial.[4]

b. Or take this example of a "sonnet about artificial intelligence, privacy, and cybersecurity in the style of William Shakespeare" written by ChatGPT for this outline:

i. When circuits hum and data streams do flow, In realms where minds of silicon do dwell, There lies a force both wondrous and aglow, Yet fraught with shadows where our secrets swell.

Oft in this age, where knowledge is the key, We trade our privacy for fleeting gain, And in the web's vast, boundless, azure sea, Our lives are cast, like leaves in autumn's rain.

But lo, the guardians of this digital sphere, With firewalls and codes, they stand on guard, To shield our thoughts, our whispers, and our fear, From those who'd breach our trust and leave us scarred.

Thus, let us tread with caution, yet with might, In cyber realms where day is one with night.

D. Not surprisingly, this increase in genAI's ability has corresponded with an increase in its use and implementation into a variety of industries and professions. In fact, it has become an industry of its own; here as a few numbers:

a. The genAI market is expected to increase in value from $40 billion in 2022 to $1.3 trillion by 2032.[5]

b. "The use of Gen AI in finance is expected to increase global gross domestic product (GDP) by 7% or nearly $7 trillion."[6]

c. 30% of Fortune Global 500 companies are actively investing in genAI.[7]

[7] https://www.bain.com/insights/how-generative-ai-moonshots-can-reach-escape-velocity/

d. Earlier this year, about 13% of professional services firms, including law firms, told the Census Bureau that they use genAI in producing goods or services.[8] That number goes up for larger firms, where 45% of AmLaw200 firms use genAI.[9]

e. According to one study, "44% of of all working hours across industries have the potential to be impacted by generative AI."[10]

E. The impact of genAI on all industries cannot be overstated. Unlike traditional AI, which automates mundane tasks like spellcheck and finding files in a database, genAI also replaces or supplements creative tasks like writing, illustrating, and researching.

II. Privacy Considerations

A. Just as businesses are starting to get up to speed with evolving data privacy laws – which require businesses in many states, including Virginia, to post detailed privacy policies to their webpages, handle and safeguard consumer data responsibly and legally, and offer consumers certain rights over their data – Artificial Intelligence now complicates compliance.

B. Imagine your business's employees engaging with an interactive AI chatbot, sharing sensitive details with it to produce proposals or improve business emails, or your developers asking the AI bot to analyze a proprietary code to fix bugs or suggest improvements. These employees may be sharing sensitive data while not knowing where the data is being stored, who can access it, and how it is protected or anonymized.

C. Generative AI technologies are trained on a large volume of datasets, which potentially were indiscriminately scraped from various internet sources, including social media platforms, forms, threads, public websites, books, journals, public research papers, etc. Take, for instance, GPT4, which has a staggering 170 trillion parameter count.

a. Under most U.S. data privacy laws, data collection and processing is legal as long as there is a reasonable basis to believe that the data is lawfully made available to the general public. However, certain privacy regulations require businesses to have a legal basis for collecting, storing, and processing even publicly available data. This large-scale collection and processing, therefore, could potentially create data privacy compliance issues if regulators deem training of generative AI is an impermissible legal basis for collection and processing.

[10] https://hbr.org/2023/12/genai-will-change-how-we-design-jobs-heres-how

D. Another important concern with generative AI technologies is the lack of clarity around individual data privacy rights, especially the "right to be forgotten". For example, in the privacy policy for GenAI giant OpenAI, the automatic collection of data section states:

   a. "We may automatically collect information about your use of the Services, such as the types of content that you view or engage with, the features you use, and the actions you take..."[11]

E. This automatic data collection includes the conversation history between the machine and the user. GenAI technologies, like OpenAI's ChatGPT, leverage the conversations to further train their models. Although the new iteration of OpenAI's model allows users to delete the conversation history, it doesn't clarify whether the model 'untrains' itself after losing that data. Thus, it remains unclear whether OpenAI and other producers of GenAI technology are truly compliant with the basic individual privacy right to delete one's data upon request.

F. The method and implications of training Large Language Models (LLMs), like ChatGPT, also creates a challenge for organizations where employees knowingly or unknowingly feed confidential or proprietary data to the generative AI, breaching the organization's data privacy policies. Examples of employees accidentally leaking sensitive information to the AI model have already been reported.

G. Once personal or sensitive personal data is fed to large language models LLMs,[12] such data becomes an inseparable part of it. This data cannot be – in reality – erased. In other words, LLMs incorporate the data into their highly complex and vast computational frameworks, which cannot be untrained or unlearned, even if the history is deleted.

[11] https://openai.com/policies/privacy-policy/

[12] A Large Language Model is an AI model that is trained on a massive dataset of language, including everything from books to Reddit threads. ChatGPT is a famous example. https://www.ibm.com/topics/large-language-models

III. Data Privacy and Cybersecurity Laws and the Impact of AI

A. The following are legal requirements common to nearly all state, federal, and foreign data privacy laws. While the U.S. currently lacks any legislation regulating AI specifically, the application of these legally required data privacy principles to generative AI is often intuitive. The European Union has already incorporated most of these data privacy requirements into its "Artificial Intelligence Act."[13] While the U.S. will likely follow suit in the near future and apply these privacy principles to the training and operation of GenAI, companies doing business with EU consumers (even if entirely U.S. based) must already be compliant with the following:

1. Data Minimization – Collect, process, and store a minimum amount of data, narrowly tailored to only what is relevant and necessary for the desired purpose.

    a. AI systems must be trained to only collect what is necessary, and data should be deleted once no longer required for its original purpose.

2. Purpose Limitation – Collect and process data only for legally permissible purposes.

    a. AI systems should, likewise, collect and use personal data only for specified purposes.

    b. For example, in its guidance on AI compliance with the EU's comprehensive data privacy law, the General Data Protection Regulation's (GDPR), France's data protection authority, the Commission nationale de l'informatique et des libertés, noted the learning phase and the production phase of an AI system have distinct purposes and each should be "determined, legitimate and clear" to comply with the GDPR's Article 5 principle of purpose specification.[14]

3. Accurate – Data must be up to date and free of errors to ensure consumer data is accurate.

    a. AI systems must allow individuals whose data is being processed to exercise their data protection and privacy rights, including the right to access and correct inaccurate data.

[14] https://www.cnil.fr/en/ai-ensuring-gdpr-compliance

4. Security – Have appropriate safeguards through implementing technical and access controls.

    a. European Data Protection Authorities have already regulated data protection in the context of AI systems. The EU's data privacy law, the GDPR, already requires data protection assessments for businesses that process EU consumer data. The new AI Act requires data protection assessments for AI systems as well.

    b. These assessments must be executed for each state of the AI life cycle.

B. In the U.S., the Federal Trade Commission has issued guidance at the intersection of privacy compliance and AI, which certainly foreshadows its enforcement priorities.

    a. The FTC emphasized the importance of abiding by the privacy commitments AI companies make in their privacy policies.[15]

    b. It cautioned against "quietly changing privacy policies" to make room for personal data collection and use by AI.[16]

        i. "It may be unfair or deceptive for a company to adopt more permissive data practices—for example, to start sharing consumers' data with third parties or using that data for AI training—and to only inform consumers of this change through a surreptitious, retroactive amendment to its terms of service or privacy policy."[17]

    c. While the U.S. currently lacks a comprehensive AI law (and a comprehensive federal data privacy law, for that matter), U.S. companies must comply with the numerous state and sectoral privacy laws, and use of generative AI can make compliance with these laws even more challenging.

    d. Even the in the absence of a comprehensive federal law, the FTC can bring enforcement actions against companies engaging in unfair or deceptive practices with regard to data.

IV. Cybersecurity and Cyber-crime Considerations

The FBI's Internet Crime Complaint Center (IC3) announced $12.5 billion in cyber-attack losses to U.S. entities alone in 2023, representing a 22% year-over-year increase.[18] This only reflects reported cyber-attacks – it does not include indirect losses, like reputational damage causing an eventual loss of profits, trade-secret theft, etc. – so is just the tip of the iceberg.

More than a quarter of all U.S. law firms suffered a data breach in 2023 alone.[19]

A. Deep Fakes

a. The new generation of LLM-powered GenAI creates dangerously high quality photos, audio, and video recordings.

   i. Previously, GenAI could create the same type of deep fake content, but the quality was poor in comparison and unlikely to deceive most viewers.

b. Modern GenAI provides a versatile tool for cybercriminals and fraudsters to write flawless phishing emails, impersonate law enforcement or corporate executives, and even access bank accounts by deceiving bank customer service representatives.

c. GenAI has vastly expanded the pool of potential cybercriminals. Unsophisticated bad actors now have powerful tools at their fingertips and no longer require advanced skills to hack networks and commit cybercrime.

d. FBI has repeatedly warned of the increasing threat posed by cybercriminals utilizing AI to conduct sophisticated phishing and social engineering attacks.[20]

   i. These AI-driven phishing attacks are characterized by their ability to craft convincing messages tailored to specific recipients and containing proper grammar and spelling, increasing the likelihood of successful deception and data theft.

B. Example Cases

a. Phishing Attacks

i. In the past, phishing attacks could be easy to spot because they were often riddled with poor grammar and spelling errors which tipped readers off to illegitimate phishing emails.

ii. With GenAI (like ChatGPT), anyone in the world can generate a grammatically correct, English language email.

1. Cybercriminals can send automated communications mimicking a bank requesting a username and login or an IRS official demanding personal tax information.

2. One of the most prolific ways that this type of attack presents itself is called "business email compromise" (BEC). One report attributed a 1,265% rise in malicious phishing emails in 2023 to BEC attacks using AI tools.[21]

a. BEC attacks are not particularly complicated or sophisticated: A bad actor first becomes aware of a business transaction, often by hacking one of the party's email servers. Once they have the details of the transaction, the threat actor creates a nearly identical email address to that of the seller in a transaction. Most often, the fake email address domain is one letter different than the real one, typically replacing the letter "I" with the letter "L" or vice versa. The threat actor then communicates regarding the transaction with the buyer, sends payment instructions, and the buyer makes a payment to the bad actor, believing they have wired money to the actual seller.

iii. Toyota Case Example[22] – A simple attack.

1. Bad actor identified names and email addresses of Toyota financial department employees.

2. The bad actor then created a fake email address and impersonated an employee of a Toyota contractor.

[21] https://slashnext.com/the-state-of-phishing-2024/.
[22] https://www.infosecurity-magazine.com/news/toyota-subsidiary-suffers-37m-bec/

a. This is where social engineering is key in these types of attacks. The bad actor often impersonates a known and trusted business partner, which results in the victim lowering their guard in communications with the bad actor.

3. The attackers then changed the payment instructions for a large wire transaction that was intended for the true contractor. Instead, the Toyota employee wired $37 million to the fraudster's bank account.

4. This attack happened in 2019. Five years later, the funds have not been recovered and the attacker has never been identified.

iv. Examples of business email compromise attacks are abundant. Even national governments have fallen victim – Puerto Rico's government was the subject of a BEC attack in 2020 that cost the country $2.6 million.

v. The Eastern District of Virginia recently issued a significant opinion that has major implications for clients who find themselves in this unfortunate position, and may alter financial liability in BEC cases: Studco Building Systems US LLC v. 1st Advantage Federal Credit Union, No. 2:20-cv-00417 (Slip. Op.) (Jan. 12, 2023 E.D. Va.).

1. Previously, BEC liability was determined based on the party who was in the best position to prevent the loss but failed to do so, whether the misled party who wired funds to the fraudster or the party whose email domain was compromised and allowed the fraudster to hijack the transaction. However, in Studco v. 1st Advantage, the EDVA held the financial institution that received fraudulently directed funds liable for the loss under the Uniform Commercial Code (UCC) Article 4A, which governs fund transfers, because the financial institution failed to act on certain alerts it received about the recipient bank account from its own anti-money laundering (AML) software.

2. This is concerning precedent for financial institutions, which are likely to be viewed by both victims and regulators as potentially financially responsible for BEC losses.

3. In this case, funds sent from Studco's account to financial institution 1st Advantage listed the intended recipient—Stucco's vendor Olympic Steel—but referenced an account number held by an unrelated individual at 1st Advantage. These transactions generated warnings in 1st Advantage's system of the apparent discrepancy between the intended recipient and the accountholder.

4. Significantly, there was little evidence that 1st Advantage had any actual knowledge of the discrepancy when it accepted payment orders. Rather, the court imputed this knowledge to 1st Advantage based on numerous unmonitored alerts generated by the credit union's anti-money laundering software on account opening discrepancies, the fraudulently diverted payments, and their attempted withdrawal by the accountholder, and other commonly known indicia that the account was being used for fraudulent purposes.

5. The court's effective creation of a "should have known" standard into the relevant provision of UCC Article 4A is in sharp contrast to many other court decisions that have required proof of actual knowledge by the recipient institution of the discrepancy between named payee and actual accountholder at the time the payment was credited to the designated account.

6. The court also held that 1st Advantage failed to act in a commercially reasonable manner or exercise ordinary care in processing transactions, because Olympic Steel did not have an account at 1st Advantage and 1st Advantage accepted ACH payments from Studco intended for Olympic Steel. The court ruled that 1st Advantage "did not maintain reasonable routines for communicating significant information to the person conducting the transaction. If 1st Advantage had exercised due diligence, the misdescription would have been discovered during the first ACH transfer."[23]

7. In relying on these obligations from the UCC and NACHA Operating rules, the court created additional grounds of recovery for victims of BECs and others whose funds are fraudulently directed to attackers' accounts.

b. Impersonation Attacks

i. Hackers use ChatGPT and similar tools to impersonate real individuals. They may use these tools to send voice messages pretending to be a friend, family member, or colleague in an effort to obtain money or gain access to financial accounts.

1. E.g. An elderly Canadian couple received a call from someone using AI voice-cloning who pretended to be their grandson. The caller stated that he had been hurt in a car accident, was currently in jail, and needed $9,400 to settle with the owner of the other car to avoid facing charges.[24]

2. On the eve of Chicago's mayoral election, a hacker created a deepfake video and posted it to X, showing candidate Paul Vallas making false incendiary statements. The video generated a significant number of views before it was removed, and the damage to this candidate's campaign was catastrophic.[25]

c. "Commonwealth Legal" Case[26]

i. A journalist received a "DCMA Copyright Infringement Notice" from a law firm called "Commonwealth Legal." The law firm purportedly represented a client who held the copyright to a photo used in the journalist's recent article, and demanded the journalist "add a credit to our client" within 5 business days to remedy the violation. They did not demand payment or removal of the image, just "credit" in the form of a link to their "client's" website.

ii. Commonwealth Legal insisted that removing the allegedly infringing image was not enough, citing DMCA 512(c) (which does actually provide potential relief for an unaware website owner who expeditiously removes infringing material). They had to link to the photo owner's website to give credit to the copyright owner.

iii. Adding to the suspicious nature of the legal demand, Commonwealth Legal's website raised some red flags. While initially it seemed to be a professional website for an Arizona-based law firm, a closer look revealed some issues.

[26] https://arstech-nica.com/gadgets/2024/04/fake-ai-law-firms-are-sending-fake-dmca-threats-to-generate-fake-seo-gains

1. The website was full of stock images (perhaps not that unusual for a law firm) and generic, wordy prose.

2. Attorneys had the classic vacant stares common to AI-generated faces.[27]

3. Attorney's bios were perhaps most revealing. Most went to either the very best law schools – Harvard, Yale, Stanford, etc. – or local Arizona schools. Most practiced in nearly realistic practice areas, but were clearly AI-generated: "Copyright Violation and Judicial Criminal Proceedings" and "Artists' Rights and High-stakes Criminal Cases." And their work experience was described in vague, generic, ostentatious, and sometimes self-contradictory language.

4. Despite the Arizona firm's name, Arizona is not, in fact, a Commonwealth.

iv. This criminal enterprise – using GenAI to create fictitious law firms to send fraudulent DCMA claims – is becoming increasingly common. The goal is not to steal money, but to generate profits for a legitimate business by driving search engine optimization for that business. In this case, the goal is to create a valuable "backlink" from a popular journalist's website to the website of the purported owner of the copyright of a stock image.

C. What GenAI CANNOT Do

a. Despite some of the scary capabilities of GenAI, including its ability to create deepfakes, traditional cybercrime is still a far more significant threat for which businesses must be prepared.

i. GenAI cannot conceal the true sources of a cyber-attack by generating and releasing a proxy server.

ii. GenAI cannot launder and cash out ransomware proceeds received in crypto currencies.

[27] https://web.archive.org/web/20240411033218/https://www.commonwealth-team.net/attorneys/

iii. GenAI cannot verify that new "clients" (i.e., the victims) of cyber gangs are not undercover agents of the FBI or the DOJ.

iv. GenAI's malware creation capabilities are primitive, bringing little to no value for experienced cybercrime groups.

b. GenAI may continue to develop and become the weapon of choice for cybercriminals, but at present, it is only one of many methods of attack.

c. Perhaps more importantly, GenAI may prove more valuable to defensive cybersecurity than it is to cybercriminals. For example, the idea of utilizing GenAI to immediately detect software vulnerabilities is an exciting prospect for CISO's in their constant struggle against cyber-attacks.[28]

V. Cybersecurity Tips for Industry

A. Third Party Vendors

a. Modern-day cybercriminals are pragmatic: they try to identify the easiest, least costly, and riskless ways to steal information or compromise systems to eventually demand ransom.

b. For instance, instead of attacking a leading financial institution – that can afford to invest tens of millions in its cybersecurity program and to hire top cybersecurity professionals – astute cybercriminals will compromise one of the financial institution's trusted third party vendors or contractors that have access to exactly the same data as is held by the financial institution itself.

c. Third parties of financial institutions include external accountants, financial auditors, law firms, and all other kinds of external firms and professionals.

d. As a result, hacked law firms – including some of the largest ones – make news headlines with an unenviable frequency.[29]

e. Organizations must carefully vet their third party vendors to ensure they do business and provide their data only to partner-companies that adhere to appropriate cybersecurity standards.

f. Importantly, most data privacy laws and regulations require companies to include contractual provisions requiring third-parties with access to the company's data to comply with data privacy obligations.

g. Remember that these third parties have access to your corporate crown jewels, so your business's cybersecurity is only as good as theirs.

B. Work from Home

a. Work from home dramatically increases the attack surface of an organization and creates exploitable weaknesses and vulnerabilities in the organization's security infrastructure.

b. Over 80% of cloud data breaches are caused by human misconfigurations of otherwise perfectly securable cloud infrastructure.[30]

c. Cyber-attacks may spread to the company network and lead to the theft or loss of sensitive company information.

d. Malware from downloads onto a personal device may be passed onto the company's network.

e. Privacy risks to confidential company information by persons having unauthorized access to the employee's personal device, such as the employee's family or friends.

f. If an employee's personal device used for business purposes becomes lost or stolen, it would be difficult for the company to monitor, inspect, or remotely wipe it.

Gentry Locke Consulting's Legislative Update

Presented by: Abigail Thompson, Carlos Hopkins, Patrice Lewis, Zach LeMaster Gentry Locke's Roanoke Seminar – September 6
Gentry Locke's Richmond Seminar – September 20

This outline summarizes numerous bills introduced in the 2024 session by topic.

I. Education

A. Elementary and Secondary Education

i. HB 17 Students who receive home instruction; participation in interscholastic programs, fees, etc. (Left in Committee)

A Bill to amend the Code of Virginia by adding in Chapter 1 of Title 22.1 a section numbered 22.1-7.3, relating to participation in public school interscholastic programs by students who receive home instruction. Prohibits public schools from joining an organization governing interscholastic programs that does not deem eligible for participation a student who (i) receives home instruction; (ii) has demonstrated evidence of progress for two consecutive academic years; (iii) is in compliance with immunization requirements; (iv) is entitled to free tuition in a public school; (v) has not reached the age of 19 by August 1 of the current academic year; (vi) is an amateur who receives no compensation but participates solely for the educational, physical, mental, and social benefits of the activity; (vii) complies with all disciplinary rules and is subject to all codes of conduct applicable to all public high school athletes; and (viii) complies with all other rules governing awards, all-star games, maximum consecutive semesters of high school enrollment, parental consents, physical examinations, and transfers applicable to all high school athletes. The bill provides that no local school board is required to establish a policy to permit students who receive home instruction to participate in interscholastic programs. The bill permits reasonable fees to be charged to students who receive home instruction to cover the costs of participation in such interscholastic programs, including the costs of additional insurance, uniforms, and equipment. The bill has an expiration date of July 1, 2029.

ii. HB 485 School boards; employee criminal history records checks and applications, penalty for noncompliance. (Continued to 2025)

A Bill to amend and reenact §§ 22.1-296.1, 22.1-296.2, and 22.1-296.4 of the Code of Virginia, relating to school boards; employee background checks and applications; penalty for noncompliance. Clarifies that certain school board employees who are (i) employed in an in-person or remote capacity or some combination thereof or (ii) fully licensed, provisionally licensed, or unlicensed are subject to the requirements in existing law to undergo a criminal history records check and a search of the registry of founded complaints of child abuse and neglect and to disclose certain criminal history information at the employment application stage and upon arrest. The bill provides that in the event that any school board fails or refuses to perform its duty to require any employee to undergo a criminal history records check as set forth in relevant law, each individual member of such board is guilty of a Class 3 misdemeanor and his position on such school board shall be deemed vacant.

iii. HB 498 and SB 225 School bd. policy; parental notification of responsibility of safe storage of firearms in household. (Vetoed by Governor)

A Bill to amend and reenact § 22.1-79.3 of the Code of Virginia, relating to school board policies; parental notification; safe storage of firearms in the household. Requires each local school board to develop and implement a policy to require the annual notification of the parent of each student enrolled in the local school division, to be sent by email and, if applicable, SMS text message within 30 calendar days succeeding the first day of each school year, of the parent's legal responsibility to safely store any firearm present in the household, risks associated with improperly stored firearms, statistics relating to firearm-related accidents, injuries, and death among youth, and other tips and strategies. The bill requires each school board to make such parental notification available in multiple languages on its website.

iv. HB 571 and SB 235 Sexually explicit content; policies on parental notification of instructional material. (Vetoed by Governor)

An Act to amend and reenact § 22.1-16.8 of the Code of Virginia, relating to policies on parental notification of instructional material that includes sexually explicit content; scope and use. Provides that nothing in the law requiring the Department of Education to develop and make available to each school board model policies for ensuring parental notification of any instructional material that includes sexually explicit content and requiring each school board to adopt policies that are consistent with but may be more comprehensive than such model policies or that is in such model policies or school board policies shall be construed to permit the censoring of books in any public elementary or secondary school.

v. HB 573 Student safety and discipline; certain reports to school principals and division superintendents. (Continued to 2025)

A Bill to amend and reenact § 22.1-279.3:1 of the Code of Virginia, relating to student safety and discipline; certain reports to school principals and division superintendents; form and scope. Requires local law-enforcement authorities to prepare in writing and provide to the principal or his designee and the division superintendent a report on (i) any suspected offense, offense for which any charge has been filed, or offense that is subject to investigation that was committed or is suspected to have been committed by a student enrolled at the school if the offense would be (a) a felony if committed by an adult, (b) a violation of the Drug Control Act and occurred on a school bus, on school property, or at a school-sponsored activity, or (c) an adult misdemeanor involving certain enumerated incidents and (ii) whether the student is released to the custody of his parent or, if 18 years of age or older, is released on bond. The bill requires division superintendents to report all such incidents to the Department of Education in an annual report that is made available to the public. Current law does not require such reports to be in writing and only applies to student offenses but does not specify whether such reports are required to be made for student offenses that are suspected, charged, or subject to investigation.

vi. HB 585 Home-based firearms dealers; prohibited near schools, penalties. (Vetoed by Governor)

An Act to amend and reenact § 54.1-4200 of the Code of Virginia and to amend the Code of Virginia by adding a section numbered 54.1-4201.3, relating to home-based firearms dealers; prohibited near schools; penalties. Provides that no home-based firearms dealer, as defined in the bill, shall be engaged in the business of selling, trading, or transferring firearms at wholesale or retail within 1.5 miles of any elementary or middle school, including buildings and grounds. The bill provides that any person who willfully violates such prohibition is guilty of a Class 2 misdemeanor for a first offense and guilty of a Class 1 misdemeanor for a second or subsequent offense.

vii. HB 617 High school student-athletes; use of name, image, or likeness. (Passed – Chapter 694)

An Act to amend the Code of Virginia by adding in Article 1 of Chapter 13 of Title 22.1 a section numbered 22.1-212.2:4, relating to high school student-athletes; use of name, image, or likeness. Establishes rights, duties, and prohibitions relating to the use of the name, image, or likeness of high school student-athletes that are equivalent to those established in law for college student-athletes. The bill also requires the Department of Education to publish in a publicly accessibly format on its website information about laws that are applicable to any contract entered into by a student-athlete relating to compensation for the use of his name, image, or likeness.

viii. HB 625 and SB 608 Community Schools, Office of; established within Department of Education. (Passed – Chapters 797 and 815)

An Act to amend and reenact § 22.1-199.7 of the Code of Virginia, relating to public education; community schools; Office of Community Schools at Department of Education. Requires the Department of Education to establish the Office of Community Schools as an office within the Department for the purpose of supporting the development and growth of community schools throughout the Commonwealth in accordance with the Virginia Community School Framework.

ix. HB 1046 School boards; parental notification of certain incidents, Alyssa's law-silent panic alarms. (Left in Committee)

A Bill to amend and reenact § 22.1-79.4 of the Code of Virginia and to amend the Code of Virginia by adding a section numbered 22.1-79.4:1, relating to school boards; parental notification of certain threats, behavior, and unlawful acts; panic alarms. Requires, within four hours of receiving notification of (i) a preliminary determination by the threat assessment team that a student poses a threat of violence or physical harm to self or others; (ii) threatening or aberrant behavior that may represent a threat to the school; or (iii) unlawful acts committed on school property, on a school bus, or at a school-sponsored activity that involve the unlawful use or possession of a weapon, homicide, criminal sexual assault, or trespassing, each division superintendent to notify the parent of each student enrolled in the relevant school of such threat, threatening or aberrant behavior, or unlawful act. The bill requires each school board to equip each public elementary and secondary school building in the local school division with at least one panic alarm that adheres to nationally recognized industry standards, including the standards of the National Fire Protection Association and Underwriters Laboratories, and is installed by a licensed and qualified professional. The bill defines "panic alarm" as a silent security system by which the user manually activates a device that sends a non-audible signal to the local law-enforcement agency that indicates a school security emergency, including a non-fire evacuation, lockdown, or active shooter situation, that requires immediate response and assistance from such agency

x. HB 1120 K-12 schools and higher educational institutions; student participation in women's sports, etc. (Left in Committee)

A Bill to amend the Code of Virginia by adding sections numbered 22.1-271.9 and 23.1-408.2, relating to K-12 schools and institutions of higher education; student participation in women's sports; civil cause of action. Requires each interscholastic, intercollegiate, intramural, or club athletic team or sport sponsored by a public school, or any other school that is a member of the Virginia High School League, or by a public institution of higher education to be expressly designated as one of the following based on the biological sex of the students who participate on the team or in the sport: (i) males, men, or boys; (ii) females, women, or girls; or (iii) coed or mixed if participation on such team or sport is open to both males and females. The bill prohibits any such team or sport that is expressly designated for females from being open to students whose biological sex is male. The bill also provides that in the event of a dispute as to the biological sex of any student seeking to participate on any interscholastic, intercollegiate, intramural, or club athletic team or sport that is expressly designated for males or females, such student may establish biological sex by presenting to the school or institution a signed physician's statement that attests to such student's biological sex based solely on (a) the student's internal and external reproductive anatomy; (b) the student's normal endogenously produced levels of testosterone; and (c) an analysis of the student's genetic makeup.

The bill prohibits any government entity, licensing or accrediting organization, or athletic association or organization from entertaining a complaint, opening an investigation, or taking any other adverse action against any such school or institution of higher education based on a violation of the provisions of the bill and creates a cause of action for any school or institution of higher education that suffers harm as a result of a violation of the bill. Finally, the bill creates a civil cause of action for any student who suffers harm as a result of a knowing violation of a provision of the bill by a school or institution or as a result of the student's reporting a violation of a provision of the bill by a school, institution, athletic association, or organization.

xi. HB 1260 Public elementary and secondary school students; parents' bill of rights established. (Left in Committee)

A Bill to amend the Code of Virginia by adding a section numbered 22.1-1.1, relating to public elementary and secondary school students; parents' bill of rights established. Establishes, consistent with § 1-240.1 of the Code of Virginia, several enumerated rights for the parents of each public elementary or secondary school student in the Commonwealth, including the right to review any books, curricula, or instructional materials being taught or made available to their child and the right to be notified of any situation that directly affects their child's safety at school.

xii. SB 37 Sage's Law; minor students experiencing gender incongruence, parental notification. (Died in Committee)

A Bill to amend and reenact § 63.2-100 of the Code of Virginia and to amend the Code of Virginia by adding a section numbered 22.1-273.5, relating to minor students experiencing gender incongruence; parental notification of certain expressions and requests and parental permission for certain plans required; parental care. Requires each public elementary or secondary school principal or his designee to (i) as soon as practicable, inform at least one parent of a minor student enrolled in such school if such minor (a) expresses to any individual who is employed in such school that such minor is experiencing gender incongruence, as defined in the bill, or (b) requests that any such employee participate in social affirmation of such minor's gender incongruence or the transition of such minor to a sex or gender different from the minor's biological sex while at school and (ii) request and receive permission from at least one parent of a minor student enrolled at such school prior to the implementation at such school of any plan concerning any gender incongruence experienced by such minor, including any counseling of such minor at school. Any such plan shall include provision for parental participation to the extent requested by the parent. The bill also clarifies, in the definition of the term "abused or neglected child," that in no event shall referring to and raising the child in a manner consistent with the child's biological sex, including related mental health or medical decisions, be considered abuse or neglect.

xiii. SB 558 School choice educational savings accounts; permits parents of qualified students to apply to DOE. (Died in Committee)

The bill provides that the Commission and its staff have the affirmative duty to ensure the Commonwealth implements the Energy Policy of the Commonwealth at the lowest reasonable cost, taking into account all cost-effective demand-side management options and the security and reliability benefits of the regional transmission entity to which each incumbent electric utility has joined. The bill requires that for certain required petitions by Appalachian Power and Dominion Energy Virginia for approvals to construct, acquire, or purchase the generating capacity using energy derived from sunlight or onshore wind, at least 35 percent of such generating capacity is from the purchases of energy from solar or onshore wind facilities owned by persons other than such utilities. Current law requires 35 percent of such generating capacity to be from the purchases of energy from solar or onshore wind facilities owned by persons other than such utilities.

C. Shared Solar

i. HB 106 and SB 253 Shared solar programs; amends existing program provisions to apply to Dominion Energy Virginia. (Passed – Chapters 715 and 763)

An Act to amend and reenact § 56-594.3 of the Code of Virginia, relating to shared solar programs; Phase II Utility; minimum bill; capacity. Amends existing shared solar program provisions applicable to Dominion Energy Virginia. The bill provides that a customer's net bill for participation in the shared solar program means the resulting amount a customer must pay the utility after the bill credit, defined in relevant law, is deducted from the customer's monthly gross utility bill. The bill divides the shared solar program into two parts, the first of which has an aggregate capacity of 200 megawatts. The bill provides that upon a determination that at least 90 percent of the megawatts of the aggregate capacity of part one of such program has been subscribed, as defined in the bill, and that project construction is substantially complete, the State Corporation Commission shall approve up to an additional 150 megawatts of capacity as part two of such program, 75 megawatts of which shall serve no more than 51 percent low-income customers, as defined in relevant law. The bill directs the Commission to initiate a proceeding to recalculate the minimum bill within 30 days of a final order in a proceeding establishing the value of a solar renewable energy certificate as required by relevant law. The bill specifies that the Commission shall update its shared solar program consistent with the requirements of the bill by March 1, 2025, and shall require each utility to file any associated tariffs, agreements, or forms necessary for implementing the program by December 1, 2025. Additionally, the bill requires the Department of Energy to convene a stakeholder work group to determine the amounts and forms of certain project incentives and to submit a written report to the Chairmen of the House Committee on Labor and Commerce and the Senate Committee on Commerce and Labor no later than November 30, 2024.

Requires the State Corporation Commission to establish by regulation a shared solar program, as defined in the bill, through which customers of American Electric Power may purchase electric power through a subscription in a shared solar facility, as defined in the bill. The bill requires the Commission to establish a minimum bill, which shall include the costs of all utility infrastructure and services used to provide electric service and administrative costs of the shared solar program, taking into account certain considerations. The bill directs the Commission to initiate a proceeding to recalculate such minimum bill within 30 days of its final order in a proceeding establishing the value of a solar renewable energy certificate as required by relevant law. The bill specifies that the Commission shall establish the shared solar program consistent with the requirements of the bill by January 1, 2025, and shall require each utility to file any associated tariffs, agreements, or forms necessary for implementing the program by July 1, 2025. Additionally, the bill requires the Department of Energy to convene a stakeholder work group to determine the amounts and forms of certain project incentives and to submit a written report to the Chairs of the House Committee on Labor and Commerce and the Senate Committee on Commerce and Labor no later than November 30, 2024.

Provides that no contract, lease, or arrangement by which a third party owns, maintains, or operates an electrical generating facility on an eligible customer-generator's property shall constitute the sale of electricity or cause the customer-generator or the third party to be considered an electric utility by virtue of participating in net energy metering. The bill prohibits an eligible customer-generator or eligible agricultural customer-generator from being required to provide proof of liability insurance or to purchase additional liability insurance as a condition of interconnection. The bill exempts eligible customer-generators and eligible agricultural customer-generators that operate a battery storage device of capacity commensurate with and equal to or greater than that of the electrical generating facility and in conjunction with the electrical generating facility from standby charges. The bill provides that any eligible customer-generator or eligible agricultural customer-generator may participate in demand response, energy efficiency, or peak reduction from dispatch of onsite battery service, provided that the compensation received is in exchange for a distinct service that is not already compensated by net metering credits for electricity exported to the electric distribution system or compensated by any other utility program or tariff.

Directs a circuit court to impanel a special grand jury when an unarmed person is killed by a law-enforcement officer or a correctional officer, as those terms are defined in relevant law, to investigate and report on any condition that involves or tends to promote criminal activity and consider bills of indictment to determine whether there is sufficient probable cause to return each such indictment as a "true bill." The bill requires the court to appoint a special prosecutor for such special grand jury who may be present during the investigatory stage only when his presence is requested by the special grand jury and may interrogate witnesses provided the special grand jury requests or consents to such interrogation. The bill states that the attorney for the Commonwealth shall not be present during the investigatory stage or interrogate witnesses.

ix. HB 246 Fines, restitution, forfeiture, penalties, etc.; criminal and traffic cases, itemized statement. (Vetoed by Governor)

An Act to amend the Code of Virginia by adding a section numbered 19.2-360.1, relating to fines, restitution, forfeiture, penalties, other costs; criminal and traffic cases; itemized statement. Requires the clerk of the court to provide an itemized statement to any defendant convicted of a traffic infraction or a violation of any criminal law of the Commonwealth or of any political subdivision thereof, or found not innocent in the case of a juvenile, who is sentenced to pay a fine, restitution, forfeiture, or penalty or assessed any other costs in the circuit court or appropriate district court of his county or city at the time such fine, restitution, forfeiture, penalty, or other costs are assessed, or within a reasonable time after assessment. The bill requires the clerk to also provide an updated statement of the outstanding balances of any fines, forfeiture, and penalties, restitution and costs, or payment history upon request of the defendant. The bill has a delayed effective date of January 1, 2025.

x. HB 290 Attorney General; instituting or conducting criminal prosecutions. (Left in Committee)

A Bill to amend and reenact § 2.2-511 of the Code of Virginia, relating to Attorney General; instituting or conducting criminal prosecutions for violations of criminal sexual assault and commercial sex trafficking committed against children. Authorizes the Attorney General to institute or conduct criminal prosecutions in cases involving a violation of criminal sexual assault or commercial sex trafficking when such crimes are committed against children.

xi. HB 452 and SB 362 First offender drug program; previous misdemeanor marijuana conviction, etc. (Passed – Chapters 785 and 811)

An Act to amend and reenact § 18.2-251 of the Code of Virginia, relating to first offender drug program; previous misdemeanor marijuana conviction. Allows any person to participate in the first offender drug program even if such person was previously convicted of an offense related to misdemeanor possession of marijuana or who has had a previous dismissal of a misdemeanor offense for possession of marijuana pursuant to the program. Current law prohibits any person with a previous marijuana conviction from participating in the program.

xii. HB 457 and SB 80 Decreasing probation period; establishes criteria for mandatory reduction (Vetoed by Governor)

An Act to amend and reenact § 19.2-304 of the Code of Virginia, relating to decreasing probation period; criteria for mandatory reduction; report. Establishes criteria for which a defendant's supervised probation period shall be reduced, including completing qualifying educational activities, maintaining verifiable employment, and complying with or completing any state-certified or state-approved mental health or substance abuse treatment program. The bill provides that a court may decrease a defendant's probation period if warranted by the defendant's conduct and in the interests of justice and may do so without a hearing. The bill also directs the Department of Corrections to meet with relevant stakeholders and provide to the General Assembly by November 1, 2024, a report regarding certain probation practices. The provisions of the bill, other than the requirement that the Department submit a report to the General Assembly, are subject to reenactment by the 2025 Session of the General Assembly.

xiii. HB 674 Fentanyl; selling, giving, or distributing a substance that contains two mgs. or more, etc. (Left in Committee)

A Bill to amend the Code of Virginia by adding a section numbered 18.2-248.05, relating to selling, giving, or distributing a substance containing fentanyl; penalties. Provides that any person who sells, gives, or distributes a substance he knows contains two milligrams or more of any mixture or substance containing a detectable amount of fentanyl, including its isomers, esters, ethers, salts, and salts of isomers, to another person without such person's knowledge that the substance sold, given, or distributed contains fentanyl is guilty of attempted murder of the first degree by poison. The bill also provides that if such sale, gift, or distribution results in the death of the other person from his use of the substance containing fentanyl, then the person who sold, gave, or distributed the substance is guilty of murder of the first degree by poison.

xiv. SB 504 Police and court records; expungement, term "otherwise dismissed." (Vetoed by Governor)

An Act to amend and reenact §§ 17.1-205.1, 19.2-392.2, as it is currently effective and as it shall become effective, 19.2-392.12, as it shall become effective, and 19.2-392.16, as it shall become effective, of the Code of Virginia, relating to expungement of police and court records. Provides that, for the purposes of expungement of police and court records, the term "otherwise dismissed" means to render a legal action out of consideration in a different way or manner than a nolle prosequi or formal dismissal by the trial court. The bill specifies that the term "otherwise dismissed" also includes those circumstances when a person is charged with the commission of a crime, a civil offense, or any offense defined in relevant law and the initial charge is reduced or amended to another offense, including a lesser included offense or the same offense with a lesser gradient of punishment, so that such person is not convicted of the initial charge and may file a petition requesting expungement of the police and court records relating to the initial charge. Under the bill, unless the subject of the criminal record requests otherwise, any person who files an appeal of a petition for an expungement that was denied shall be allowed to proceed under a pseudonym, and such designation shall apply in the trial court and on any appeal. The bill also allows for the expungement of any emergency or preliminary protective order that was attached or factually related to an expunged charge or offense, provided that a permanent protective order was not ordered as a result of such emergency or preliminary protective order. The bill also provides that if a court finds that the continued existence and possible dissemination of information relating to an arrest may cause circumstances that constitute manifest injustice, including any hindrance to obtain employment, an education, or credit, it shall enter an order requiring the expungement of the police and court records. Under current law, a court shall enter an order of expungement when information relating to an arrest causes or may cause circumstances that constitute a manifest injustice to the petitioner. The bill requires a business screening service, defined in the bill, to destroy all expunged records, as defined in the bill, and to follow reasonable procedures to ensure that it does not maintain or sell expunged records. The bill also provides that an indigent person may file a petition for expungement without the payment of fees and costs and can request court-appointed counsel, who shall be paid from the Sealing Fee Fund. Except for the provisions regarding the filing of an appeal under a pseudonym and the circumstances that constitute manifest injustice, the bill has a delayed effective date of January 1, 2026.

Virginia Construction Updates: What's Keeping the Construction Industry Up at Night?

Patricia "PJ" Turner, Andrew O. Gay[1]

I. Introduction

Virginia is home to a dynamic construction industry. As the law in Virginia continues to develop, owners, contractors, and other construction professionals must be able to make informed decisions for their businesses.

Construction law in Virginia has seen several significant changes in recent years. Along with legislative updates to payment requirements, construction professionals continue to navigate difficult waters when dealing with mechanic's liens. In addition, the law surrounding notice requirements, indemnification, and waiver of claims provisions continues to develop in the courts.

II. Legislative Changes: Payment Requirements and Contractual Provisions

A. Prohibition of Pay-if-Paid. In 2022, Governor Youngkin signed Senate Bill 550 into law. This bill adopted changes regarding "pay-if-paid" provisions.

A "pay-if-paid" clause typically makes the owner's payment of the general contractor a condition precedent to any obligation for the general contractor to pay its subcontractors.

In contrast, a "pay-when-paid" provision typically allows an unpaid general contractor to delay payment to subcontractors for a reasonable time—payment by the owner is not a condition precedent under a "pay-when-paid" provision.

1. Historically, Virginia expressly approved pay-if-paid and pay-when-paid clauses where the contractual language was facially clear.[2]

   The 2022 legislative changes prohibited pay-if-paid clauses in both private and public construction contracts and required general contractors to take on an obligation to pay their subcontractors—and so on down the chain of contract.[3]

   In general, under these changes, a contractor is required to pay its subcontractor within the earlier of:
   a. 60 days after the subcontractor submits its invoice, or
   b. 7 days after payment from the owner or contractor above it.[4]

Pay-when-paid clauses remain valid, subject to the outer requirements of these statutory payment timing provisions.

2. The 2022 legislation had several holes. Effective July 1, 2023, several new revisions help clarify the 2022 changes[5]:

    a. The definitions section of the Virginia Prompt Payment Act (Va. Code § 2.2-4347) has been updated. The revised section now defines a "construction contract," defines "general contractor" alongside "contractor," and cleans up other language.

    b. Va. Code § 2.2-4354 now expressly provides that a general contractor is obligated to pay its subcontractors, even though it has not itself been paid, "within 60 days of the receipt of an invoice following satisfactory completion of the work for which the subcontractor has invoiced."[6]

    If the contractor withholds payment, it must notify the subcontractor in writing within 50 days of receiving an invoice of its intention to withhold payment and the reason for nonpayment. The contractor's notice must specifically identify:

    (i) the contractual noncompliance,
    (ii) the dollar amount being withheld, and
    (iii) the lower-tier subcontractor responsible for the contractual noncompliance.[7]

    c. Va. Code § 11-4.6 has been modified for consistency with §§ 2.2-4347 and 2.2-4354.

    A "contractor" or "general contractor" under this section is defined by reference to the definition in the contractor licensing statute, § 54.1-1100:

    "'Contractor' means any person, that for a fixed price, commission, fee, or percentage undertakes to bid upon, or accepts, or offers to accept, orders or contracts for performing, managing, or superintending in whole or in part, the construction, removal, repair or improvement of any building or structure permanently annexed to real property owned, controlled, or leased by him or another person or any other improvements to such real property."[8]

    A "subcontractor," meanwhile, is defined by reference to § 2.2-4347:

[5] See 2022 Bill Text VA H.B. 2500.
[6] Va. Code § 2.2-4354. See also id. (requiring payment to subcontractor or notice of intent to withhold within seven days of receiving payment from owner).
[8] See Va. Code § 54.1-1100 (emphasis added).

"'Subcontractor' means any entity that has a contract to supply labor or materials to the contractor to whom the contract was awarded or to any subcontractor in the performance of the work provided for in such contract."[9]

New language clarifies that an owner must notify the contractor within 45 days of receiving an invoice of the owner's intention to withhold all or part of the invoice, "specifically identifying the contractual noncompliance and the dollar amount being withheld."[10]

Similarly, just as in § 2.2-4354, a contractor must notify a subcontractor in writing within 50 days of receiving an invoice of its intention to withhold payment. The contractor's notice must specifically identify:

(i) the contractual noncompliance,
(ii) the dollar amount being withheld, and
(iii) the subcontractor responsible for the contractual noncompliance.[11]

The contractor's right to withhold payment arises from the "subcontractor's noncompliance with the terms of the contract" rather than the subcontractor's "breach of contract."[12]

References to "higher-tier" and "lower-tier" contractors have been replaced with "general contractor" and "subcontractor."[13]

New language also clarifies that the prompt payment, notice, and interest provisions generally flow down the chain to subcontracts between subcontractors and lower-tier subcontractors or suppliers. Importantly, there is an exception: these provisions do not flow down:

(i) if the project is a single-family residential project, or
(ii) if the value of the project or aggregate of projects under the construction contracts is less than $500,000.[14]

B. Both § 2.2-4354 and § 11-4.6 expressly provide that their restrictions on a contractor's ability to withhold payment do not apply to retainage provisions. In addition, § 2.2-4354 does not apply to contracts awarded solely for professional services from an architectural and engineering firm.

III. Mechanic's Liens: A Primer on Timing

A. Mechanic's Lien Perfection. A person who performs labor or furnishes materials of the value of $150 or more for the construction or repair of a building has a statutorily created lien on the property if it is perfected according to statutory requirements.[15] Va. Code § 43-4 governs the perfection of a valid mechanic's lien.[16] A mechanic's lien is inchoate unless perfected,[17] and the statutory requirements for perfection of the lien must be strictly construed.[18]

1. To perfect the mechanic's lien, the claimant must record a memorandum of mechanic's lien with the clerk of court. The lien must show:
   a. the names and addresses of the owner of the property and the claimant of the lien;
   b. the amount and consideration of the claim;
   c. the time or times when the amount is or will be due and payable; and
   d. the date from which interest is claimed.

   The required information must be verified by the oath of the claimant or the claimant's agent, including a statement of the claimant's intention to claim the benefit of the lien and a brief description of the property on which the lien is claimed. The memorandum must also contain the claimant's license or certificate number, if any, and the issue and expiration dates for the license or certificate.

   Va. Code §§ 43-5 (for contractors), 43-8 (for subcontractors), and 43-10 (for lower-tier subcontractors) provide statutory forms for the memorandum of mechanic's lien. Included in each section is a safe harbor for a lien claimant who "substantially" complies with the provided form. Va. Code § 43-15 also provides that a lien will not be invalidated if the memorandum is not willfully false, reasonably identifies the property, and "conforms substantially" with the requirements of §§ 43-5, 43-8, and 43-10. The Supreme Court of Virginia has held that a defect is substantial "if it would prejudice a party or if it would thwart one of the purposes underlying the statute."[19]

2. Equally as critical as the memorandum requirements are the strict timing requirements for recording the memorandum and claiming payment for completed work. If the lien is not perfected in the statutory manner within the proper time, it is unenforceable.[20]

[15] Va. Code § 43-3.

[16] § 43-4 governs memorandum requirements for contractors. Subcontractors, as well as claimants providing labor or materials to subcontractors, must meet the requirements of § 43-4 as well as additional notice requirements in §§ 43-7 and 43-9, respectively.

[17] DeWitt v. Coffey, 150 Va. 365, 143 S.E. 710 (1928).

[19] Ulka Desai v. A. R. Design Grp., Inc., 293 Va. 426, 435, 799 S.E.2d 506, 510 (2017).

a. The "90-Day Rule" provides that a lien claimant may not record the memorandum later than 90 days from the last day of the month in which the claimant last performed labor or furnished materials, and in no event later than 90 days from the time work on the project is terminated.

b. The "150-Day Rule" provides that the memorandum may not include amounts due for labor or materials furnished more than 150 days prior to the last day on which labor was performed or material furnished prior to the recording of the memorandum.

(i) This does not apply to sums withheld as retainage up to 10% of the contract price or to sums not yet due because of nonpayment to the party with whom the lien claimant contracted.

3. On one-family or two-family residential projects, the building permit may specify a mechanic's lien agent to receive notice from anyone seeking payment for labor performed or material furnished.[21] If the building permit lists a mechanic's lien agent, any contractor or supplier must first provide notice to the mechanic's lien agent before performing work or suppling materials, in order to be entitled to perfect and enforce a mechanic's lien later.[22]

B. Mechanic's Lien Enforcement. Unlike the perfection requirements, the remedial statutory provisions for enforcing a perfected lien should be liberally construed.[23] In general, the lien must be enforced by filing a complaint in the jurisdiction where the building or structure is situated or where the owner resides.[24] The plaintiff must include an itemized statement of the account, showing the amount and character of work done or materials furnished, the prices charged, any payments made, the balance due, and the time from which interest is claimed on the balance.[25]

IV. Notice Requirements for Claims

A. Requiring Notice for Claims. In many cases, a contractor (or owner) may wish to require its subcontractor (or general contractor) to provide specific written notice of any claim under the parties' agreement. Virginia case law protects the ability to impose strict notice requirements, and the parties must comply with such contractual notice requirements. Actual notice that does not satisfy the contract is insufficient.

B. AMEC Civil—General Principles. In Commonwealth v. AMEC Civil LLC, 280 Va. 396, 699 S.E.2d 499 (2010), the Supreme Court of Virginia addressed a notice of claims requirement in a contract between VDOT and AMEC Civil. Though AMEC Civil provided actual written notice, the Supreme Court of Virginia held that this was insufficient to satisfy the contractual requirements and the strictly construed statutory requirements on which the contract was based. As to some of AMEC Civil's claims, it purported to have put VDOT on actual notice of its intention to bring claims against VDOT, and it relied upon documented minutes of meetings to constitute written notice. However, the Supreme Court of Virginia held AMEC Civil to the standard of Va. Code Ann. § 33.1-386(A), which the parties had incorporated into their contract and required that "a written document [be] delivered to VDOT clearly stating the contractor's intention to file a claim."[26] Furthermore, as to claims for which AMEC Civil had written letters to VDOT declaring its intention to file suit, the Supreme Court held that AMEC Civil had not complied with the timing requirements outlined in the same statute.[27] This case establishes that, in Virginia, parties will be strictly held to agreed-upon notice procedures and timelines.

C. Subsequent Application. The strict construction of notice requirements from AMEC Civil was later applied to a contract between a contractor and subcontractor in SNC-Lavalin Am. Inc. v. Alliant Techsystems, Inc., 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 118312 (W.D. Va. 2011). There, the court also refused to treat actual notice as sufficient, instead holding that the contractual notice requirements had to be strictly met. The subcontractor argued that because the changes made to the construction plan were at the direction of the general contractor–leading to all parties being aware of delay and increased costs–contractually required written notice should be dispensed with. However, the Court disagreed, emphasizing that the contract did not create an exception for actual notice or contractor-directed changes.

In Coleman-Adams Construction, Inc. v. Mills Heating & Air Conditioning, Inc., 93 Va. Cir. 442 (2016), the Amherst County Circuit Court applied AMEC Civil and Alliant, reaffirming that contractual notice requirements govern. The court emphasized that, as the Supreme Court had stated in AMEC Civil, a written claim document "must clearly give notice of the contractor's intent to file its claim."[28] Mills offered communications that were given within the contractually specified time period, but failed to clearly give such notice. Similarly, other communications provided actual notice, but fell outside the prescribed window. Because none of the communications offered by Mills complied with the contract's notice requirements, the court granted Coleman-Adams's plea in bar and dismissed the complaint.

V. Indemnification Provisions: Post-Uniwest Updates

A. Va. Code Ann. § 11-4.1. Virginia's anti-indemnification provision prohibits any provision contained in any construction contract by which the contractor purports to [27] Id. (discussing how "[t]he statute also requires that such notice be given at one of two times: 1) 'at the time of the occurrence' of the claim; or 2) at the 'beginning of the work upon which the claim . . . is based.' Code § 33.1-386(A).").

[28] Coleman Adams Contr., Inc. v. Mills Heating & Air Conditioning, Inc., 93 Va. Cir. 442, 445 (Va. Cir. 2016) (citing Commonwealth v. AMEC Civil LLC, 280 Va. 396, 408, 699 S.E.2d 499, 506 (2010)).

indemnify another party against liability "caused by or resulting solely from the negligence of such other party or his agents or employees."[29]

Anti-indemnity statutes generally fall into one of two categories. Some allow indemnification of a party for the party's own negligence unless that party was solely negligent. Others do not allow indemnification of a party for its own negligence under any circumstance, regardless of whether the indemnitee was solely at fault. Based on the presence of the word "solely" in the statute, it would appear that Virginia might bar indemnification only for the indemnitee's sole negligence. However, the decision discussed below reveals that this is not the case.

B. The Uniwest Decision. The Supreme Court of Virginia, however, has determined that Virginia's anti-indemnity statute actually prohibits indemnification for the indemnitee's own negligence in all circumstances—not just where the indemnitee is solely negligent.

In Uniwest Construction, Inc. v. Amtech Elevator Services, Inc., 280 Va. 428, 699 S.E.2d 223 (2010), the Court treated the phrases "caused by" and "resulting solely from" as disjunctive. Therefore, the phrases should be taken separately, and, as a result, the statute disallows indemnification for damages "caused by" the indemnitee's negligence as well as those "resulting solely from" the fault of the indemnitee. After Uniwest, Virginia construction contracts cannot include an indemnity provision for the indemnitee's own negligence, even if the resulting damages are also caused by another party's negligence.

C. Subsequent Decisions. Since Uniwest, other cases have continued to apply the Supreme Court of Virginia's interpretation of § 11-4.1.[30] The focus of such cases, however, has sometimes shifted from the content of the statute to whether the statute applies at all.

As a preliminary matter, § 11-4.1 only applies to "contracts relating to . . . construction." Several cases have treated the statute as inapplicable because the contract at issue was not related to construction under the meaning of § 11-4.1.

1. For example, courts have held that contracts related to the sale of materials for a construction project and rental contracts for construction equipment do not fall within § 11-4.1.[31]

2. Similarly, the purchase from an architect of plans for a building to be constructed without the architect's participation, while related to construction in the abstract, would not be a "contract related to construction" under § 11-4.1.[32]

3. However, a contract that relates directly to construction and imposes supervisory duties during the construction phase of building falls within § 11-4.1.[33]

Courts have continued to emphasize that § 11-4.1 must be construed narrowly because it is an exception to Virginia's public policy in favor of broad freedom to contract.[34] Moving forward, construction professionals should pay close attention to the characteristics of contracts that may bring them within the anti-indemnity coverage of § 11-4.1. From a practical standpoint, contracts that merely procure designs, materials, or equipment for construction projects, without creating ongoing obligations during the actual building phase, may not be subject to the same anti-indemnity provisions as broader agreements.

D. Recently an Indemnification Provision was Interpreted to Only Cover Third-Party Claims. In 5513 6129 Leesburg Pike, Falls Church, LLC v. Paramount Constr. Servs., LLC, No. CL 2022-411, 2024 Va. Cir. LEXIS 38 (2024), the Court held that the parties' indemnification provision only encompassed third-party claims.[35] Therefore, the Court found that Indemnitor's liability was not triggered when the claim was only brought by the indemnitee.[36] In this case, the Court construed the words "defend" and "claim" in the parties' contract to mean that a duty to indemnify could only arise if the indemnitee had to defend itself from a claim brought against it by a third-party.

This case is the only Virginia case to interpret an indemnification provision in this manner. Still, it is important that construction professionals are aware of this decision. The Court ignored the other language in the parties' indemnification provision, such as "hold harmless the Owner … from and against claims, damages, losses, and expenses, included but not limited to attorneys' fees."[37] It would be advisable for parties to include explicit language in their indemnification provisions to avoid this unfortunate outcome, such as "this provision includes but is not limited to third-party claims."

E. Application. Contractual indemnity provisions in construction contracts should be structured to avoid running afoul of Uniwest by:

1. inserting savings language, such as "To the fullest extent permitted by law", at the beginning of the indemnity provision; and by

2. inserting at the end of the indemnity provision specific language which ties the indemnity obligations to the amount of fault of the respective parties: i.e., "Contractor shall indemnify the Owner in an amount proportional to the amount of Contractor's own negligence or fault (and the negligence or fault of its subcontractors, anyone directly or indirectly employed by them, or anyone for whose acts they may be liable), compared to the proportional amount of fault, if any, attributable to all parties indemnified hereunder."

F. Duty to Defend Provisions. Another significant update to Virginia law on indemnification provisions is the legislature's prohibition of "duty to defend" obligations in contracts with design professionals. While traditional indemnification provisions often impose a duty to defend claims brought against the indemnitee, the General Assembly adopted changes in 2020 that prohibit such language.

1. Va. Code § 11-4.4 is the corollary to § 11-4.1 for contracts with architects and engineers. The legislature added a paragraph to § 11-4.4 stating the following:

   Any provision contained in any contract relating to the planning or design of a building, structure, or appurtenance thereto, including moving, demolition, or excavation connected therewith, or any provision contained in any contract relating to the planning or design of construction projects by which any party purports to impose a duty to defend on any other party to the contract, is against public policy and is void and unenforceable.

2. The effect of this change is that, for qualifying contracts after 2020, the inclusion of a duty to defend obligation renders the entire provision void and unenforceable.

3. This change applies to any provision in a qualifying contract, not just an indemnification provision.

In light of this change, owners, contractors, and design professionals should take care to avoid duty to defend obligations in their contracts. Otherwise, entire provisions of those contracts risk being declared void and unenforceable.

VI. Emerging Issue – Va. Code Ann. § 11-4.1:1

A. Va. Code Ann. § 11-4.1:1. Virginia's waiver of payment bond claims and contract claims prohibits any provision contained in any construction contract that "waives or diminishes a subcontractor's, lower-tier subcontractor's, or material supplier's right to [1] assert payment bond claims or [2] his right to assert claims for demonstrated additional costs in a contract executed prior to providing any labor, services, or materials is null and void." [38] Even though this provision is almost ten years old, effective July 1, 2015, its application in the world of construction contracts reamins an emerging issue that construction professionals should be aware of.

[38] Va. Code Ann. § 11-4.1:1 (emphasis added).

This provision relies upon Va. Code Ann. § 43-1's definition of subcontractor: "all such contractors, laborers, mechanics, and persons furnishing materials, who do not contract with the owner but with the general contractor."[39] Importantly, this provision does not prevent a subcontractor from waiving or diminishing its right to assert payment bond claims or to assert claims for demonstrated additional costs after performing its obligations under a construction contract. The provision only prevents a subcontractor from contracting for such waivers before performing its obligations under a construction contract. Therefore, any provision in a construction contract that purports to make such waivers before the work is performed will be declared null and void.

B. Emerging Application. Strata Solar, LLC v. Fall Line Constr., LLC, No. 4:22cv106, 2023 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 210324 (E.D. Va. Nov. 13, 2023), is the first time a court sitting in Virginia had the opportunity to directly address this new provision. In this case, the general contractor was Strata, and the subcontractor was Fall Line. Strata had made several changes to the project plans, which had led to Fall Line suffering delays and incurring additional costs. When a dispute arose over payment for these extra costs, Strata relied upon a provision in the parties' subcontract titled "no damages for delay," which prevented Fall Line from increasing the price for delays even if caused by Strata.[40] Fall Line argued that this provision was "unenforceable as a matter of Virginia law because [it] 'attempt[ed] to waive and/or diminish Fall Line's right to assert claims for its additional costs … in advance of Fall Line'" performing work on the project.[41] The Court agreed, holding that the subcontract provision "impermissibly diminish[ed] Fall Line's right as a subcontractor to assert claims for demonstrated additional costs" in violation of Va. Code Ann. § 11-4.1:1.[42] The Court discussed how such contractual provisions were valid before the enactment of this statute. However, any provision "that waives or diminishes … [a subcontractor's] right to assert claims for demonstrated additional costs" would be encompassed by and invalidated under this statute.[43]

C. Further Illustrations of the Type of Contract Provision Encompassed by § 11-4.1:1. Like Strata above, the Court in BAE Sys. Ordnance Sys. v. Fluor Fed. Sols., LLC, Civil Action No. 7:20-cv-587, 2024 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17020 (W.D. Va. Jan. 31, 2024), invalidated a provision in the parties' agreement. The provision in question was a "Limitation on Damages" provision, which limited the parties' claims for damages to thirty million dollars. Interpreting the parties' contract, the Court ultimately held that this provision did not apply to directed changes that increased or decreased the costs or time required for performance. However, the Court held that even if the liquidated on damages provision did encompass such costs, it would be "null and void under Virginia

Code § 11-4.1:1 to the extent" that it limited the subcontractor's ability to recover for increased costs.[44]

In Misc. Metals, Inc. v. Travelers Cas. & Sur. Co. of Am., No. 1:16-cv-499 (LMB/MSN), 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 202780, at *4 (E.D. Va. Aug. 10, 2016), the Plaintiff argued that Va. Code Ann. § 11-4.1:1 voided a forum selection clause, which required it to bring its claims in state court rather than federal. The Court was unconvinced, reasoning that the "[p]laintiff does not explain how its right to litigate its claim would be waived or diminished by litigation in state court rather than in federal court."[45] The above cases illustrate that a provision that prospectively waives or diminishes a subcontractor's right to assert claims for demonstrated additional costs will be found null and void. Construction professionals should be forward-looking when drafting their subcontracts to ensure that a provision does not waive or diminish such rights.

VII. Conclusion

Given the changing legislative landscape and the potential consequences of these topics, construction professionals should be aware of and on the lookout for these and related issues. Further development in these areas, whether from the legislature or in the courts, could continue to reshape construction law in Virginia. Careful planning, drafting, and communication can help businesses avoid undesirable or unexpected outcomes and keep the industry moving forward.

Essential Ethics Rules To Use Every Day In Your Legal Practice: Using The Ethics Rules as Best Business Practices

Gregory J. Haley
Jonathan D. Puvak

Gentry Locke Seminar

September 20, 2024 – Richmond

I. Purpose of this program.

The purpose of this program is to suggest ways to implement the Virginia Rules of Professional Conduct (the "Ethics Rules") as part of the practice of law and to benefit clients, achieve better outcomes, promote efficient and effective legal practices, and—of course—to comply with the Ethics Rules.

What do clients expect?

Clients have high expectations of their lawyers. Given the nature of the lawyer's role, these expectations can be daunting. The Ethics Rules put structure and context in how the lawyer must manage the attorney-client relationship. The elements of the relationship include:

1. The duty of loyalty.

2. Effective work to accomplish the objectives of the representation.

3. Professional competence.

4. Good communication. Accessibility and responsiveness.

5. A reasonable fee.

6. The exercise of independent professional judgment.

7. Confidentiality.

The Ethic Rules require specific types of communications with clients in specific circumstances. We have prepared this outline to address the perspectives of the client and the lawyer, in the context of achieving a successful representation. We have not attempted to address every provision of the Ethics Rules. Rather, we have focused on the rules that impact a lawyer's practice every day or in most cases—i.e., the essential rules.

The Preamble to the Ethics Rules states:

> In all professional functions a lawyer should be competent, prompt and diligent. A lawyer should maintain communications with a client concerning the representation. A lawyer should keep in confidence information relating to representation of a client except so far as disclosure is required or permitted by the Rules of Professional Conduct or other law.

This outline addresses the issues as stated in the Preamble.

II. Establishing the Attorney-Client Relationship: The Engagement Letter and related matters.

Contracts between a client and a lawyer for legal services are a unique type of contract. A client-lawyer contract cannot be analyzed using the conventional modes of commercial contracts. To this point, the Supreme Court of Virginia has stated:

> Such an agreement is permeated with the paramount relationship of attorney and client which necessarily affects the rights and duties of each.

Heinzman v. Fine, Fine, Legum & Fine, 217 Va. 958, 962 (1977).

Any doubts about the effect of or fairness of provisions in the client-lawyer agreement will generally be resolved in favor of the client and against the lawyer.

The Ethics Rules give structure and context to the relationship.

1. The Primary Rules. There are four primary rules that address establishing the attorney-client relationship:

a. Rule 1.7 addresses when a lawyer may have a conflict of interest.

b. Rule 1.2 addresses the scope of the representation.

c. Rule 1.4 addresses the lawyer's duty to communicate with the client on an ongoing basis.

d. Rule 1.5 addresses the lawyer's fees.

2. Rule 1.7. Conflicts of Interests. The Duties of Loyalty and Independent Judgment.

a. Rule 1.7.a provides:

> A lawyer shall not represent a client if the representation involves a concurrent conflict of interest. A concurrent conflict of interest exists if:
> 1. The representation of one client will be directly adverse to another client; or
>
> 2. There is a significant risk that the representation of one or more clients will be materially limited by the lawyer's responsibilities to another client, a former client or a third person or by a personal interest of the lawyer.
> (b) Notwithstanding the existence of a concurrent conflict of interest under paragraph (a), a lawyer may represent a client if each affected client consents after consultation; and:

1. The lawyer reasonably believes that the lawyer will be able to provide competent and diligent representation due to each affected client;

2. The representation is not prohibited by law;

3. The representation does not involve the assertion of a claim by one client against another client represented by the lawyer in the same litigation or other proceeding before a tribunal; and

4. The consent from the client is memorialized in writing.

b. What situations trigger the need for a conflicts analysis?

1. The representation of other parties involved in the same dispute or transaction.

2. The representation of other parties involved in the matter, but in an unrelated matter.

3. The prior representation of other parties involved in the matter.

4. The representation of multiple parties, usually affiliated with each other, in a matter.

5. The lawyer has a business or personal relationship with a party.

6. In cases involving the representation of multiple plaintiffs in a single matter, the lawyer should ask a few questions:

a. Do the defendants have adequate resources to cover all claims by all plaintiffs?

b. Is there insurance coverage available that is adequate to cover the expected claims?

c. In this type of situation, can the lawyer represent multiple plaintiffs when the plaintiffs may be competing for recovery from a limited amount of resources, assets, or insurance coverage?

When these situations exist, the lawyer must analyze the application of Rule 1.7.

c. The Rule 1.7 analysis:

1. Evaluation. Will there be a "significant risk" that the representation of the client will be "materially limited" by the lawyer's responsibilities to another client or the "personal interests" of the lawyer?

Think hard about what can go wrong; will either client complain if there is a bad result?

What is the probability of a real problem? Is it possible that one client could claim that the lawyer sacrificed the interests of one client to protect another client or the lawyer's own interests?

2. Determination. The lawyer must conclude that he or she can proceed under the Rule 1.7 standard.

3. Disclosure. The lawyer must make a meaningful disclosure to all of the affected clients.

4. Document the consent. Prepare a letter to each client. Explain the scope of the disclosure and the client's consent. Give notice of the circumstances that may require a lawyer's withdrawal in the future if a potential conflict of interests develops later in the proceeding or representation.

Based on our experience, if you have too many clients with potentially competing interests, it will show up later in the litigation or the representation. If there is a real problem with conflicting interests, it is better to address that problem as early in the representation as is possible.

When there is a real conflict under Rule 1.7, hire separate counsel.

4. The Engagement Letter.

a. The primary tool for establishing and defining the attorney-client relationship is the Engagement Letter.

b. The goals of the Engagement Letter:

1. Define the objectives and the scope of the representation.

2. Define the duties of the client to the lawyer.

3. Establish the lawyer's fee.

4. State the terms and conditions of the representation.

The Engagement Letter should be a positive document; it should be practical and fair to both the client and the lawyer.

A good Engagement Letter takes time and effort; but it can also set the tone for the entire relationship, clarify the expectations of the client and the lawyer, and avoid misunderstandings.

c. What can go wrong?

The lawyer and the client should also consider what can go wrong:

1. A bad outcome.

2. A poor relationship between the client and the lawyer.

3. The client fails to cooperate with the lawyer.

4. The client is dissatisfied with the lawyer's work.

5. The client fails to pay the lawyer's fees.

Does the Engagement Letter address what happens when something goes wrong? Under what circumstances may the lawyer terminate the relationship?

d. The Scope of Representation. Rule 1.2.

The Engagement Letter should state the objectives of the representation and the scope of the representation. Rule 1.2 allows the Engagement Letter to define and limit the scope of representation. The Engagement Letter can (and should) limit the scope of the representation.

The scope of representation will vary depending on the nature of the representation and the client:

1. Litigation matters.

2. Transactions and business matters.

3. Fixed fee matters.

4. Trusts and estates.

5. Ongoing representation in business or personal matters.

6. Plaintiff's contingency fees.

7. Domestic relations.

8. Criminal.

9. Insurance defense matters.

10. Other specific types of representation.

In drafting the Engagement Letter, the lawyer should consider the appropriate limitations on the scope of representation:

a. Exclude other disputes.

b. Exclude other transactions that are not identified in the Engagement Letter.

c. Identify the specific documents or work product to be prepared.

d. Exclude appeals.

e. Ongoing client communications. Rule 1.4.

Rule 1.4.a and 1.4.b provide that the lawyer shall keep the client reasonably informed on the status of the matter and explain the matter to permit the client to make informed decisions. The Engagement Letter is the first step in this ongoing communication process. This issue is discussed below.

f. Fees. Rule 1.5.

1. Reasonableness and Disclosure.

The key elements of Rule 1.5 include reasonableness and disclosure. Rule 1.5.a provides that a lawyer's fee shall be reasonable and lists the factors to be considered in determining the reasonableness of the fee. Rule 1.5.b provides that the lawyer's fee shall be reasonably explained to the client, including the amount, basis or rate of the fee.

2. Contingent Fee Arrangements.

Rule 1.5.c provides that, in most types of cases, a fee may be contingent on the outcome of the matter. A contingent fee agreement must state the method by which the fee is determined.

3. Shared Fees.

Rule 1.5.e allows a lawyer to share fees with lawyers in a different firm. The client however, must be advised of and consent to the fee sharing arrangement. See Rule 1.5; Comment 7.

The agreement between two lawyers to share fees should be in writing and state how the fees will be shared and what the role of each lawyer will be in the representation.

In a shared fee arrangement, the referring attorney is not required to participate actively in the representation. Rule 1.5.e allows a law firm to divide a fee with a referring attorney when the referring attorney assumes no responsibility to the client and will provide no further services to the client. LEO 1739.

4. Advance Payments/Retainers.

A fee agreement can include a retainer payment or advance payment of a fee. The lawyer is obligated to return any unearned portion of an advanced fee payment. Rule 1.5, Comment 4.

5. Disputes.

The Engagement Letter can address how disputes about the lawyer's fee will be addressed.

6. LEO 1606 (2016)

Legal Ethics Opinion 1606 (2016) is a "Compendium Opinion" that summarizes the guidelines for fee issues, including: the unique nature of client-lawyer contracts for legal services; the required handling of retainers; the required handling of advanced legal fees; non-refundable legal fees; fixed fees; and contingency fees.

g. Identify the client/multiple clients.

1. The Engagement Letter should identify the client (or clients) in the representation.

2. Disclaim any representation of constituents or affiliates of the client that are not specifically identified as clients. See Rule 1.13 (organization as client) and Rule 1.7, Comment 10 (lawyer to explain who the client is).

3. Multiple clients. The Engagement Letter should address the issues involved in matters in which the lawyer is representing multiple clients.

a. How will the lawyer communicate with the clients?

b. Who will make decisions for the clients?

c. Who will pay the lawyer's fee?

d. A statement of the factors under Rule 1.7 that allow the multiple representation; including that there are no material difference in the interests or positions of the multiple clients. See Rule 1.7, Comment 29.

e. An explanation of how the multiple representation may affect the application of the attorney-client privilege as to confidential and sensitive information.

g. Additional matters to consider in an engagement letter.

1. The expectation that the lawyer will communicate with the clients and others by email and other forms of electronic communication.

2. Preserving emails and electronic communications in litigation matters.

3. Social media. In litigation matters, advising the client to refrain from or limit participation in social media activities.

4. Outcomes. Disclaim any prediction of a specific outcome.

5. Expected expenses. Identify any significant expenses that the client will be responsible for.

6. Expected lawyer's fee. Disclaim any estimate of the amount of specific legal fees.

7. Disclaim any third party beneficiaries.

8. Explain the rights of the client and the lawyer to terminate the representation.

i. Possible elements of the Engagement Letter:

In integrating these provisions of the Ethics Rules, an Engagement Letter could include the following elements:

1. Identify the client or clients.

2. State the objectives of the representation.

3. State the specific subject matter of the representation.

4. Identify the expected legal work required and the plan for executing the work.

5. A discussion of the legal, factual, and business issues involved.

6. A discussion of the expected course of the representation.

7. A discussion of the expected role of the client.

8. A explanation of the lawyer's fee and the billing process.

9. A discussion of the expected significant costs the client will be responsible for.

This type of substantive discussion will help the lawyer and the client to have a clear understanding of the representation and the expectations of both.

5. The organization as the client and the representation of constituents.

Rule 1.13(a), (d), (e). Organization as client. Comments 1, 9, 10, and 12.

a. A lawyer employed or retained by an organization represents the organization acting through its duly authorized constituents.

d. In dealing with an organization's directors, officers, employees, members, shareholders or other constituents, a lawyer shall explain the identity of the client when it is apparent that the organization's interests are adverse to those of the constituents with whom the lawyer is dealing.

e. A lawyer representing an organization may also represent any of its directors, officers, employees, members, shareholders or other constituents, subject to the provisions of Rule 1.7.

Comment 1. The entity as the client. An organizational client is a legal entity, but it cannot act except through its officers, directors, employees, shareholders and other constituents. These persons are referred herein as the constituents of the corporate organizational client. The duties defined in this Comment apply equally to unincorporated associations.

Comment 10. Clarifying the lawyer's role. When the organization's interests may be or become adverse to those of one or more of its constituents, the lawyer should advise any constituent, whose interest the lawyer finds adverse to that of the organization of the conflict or potential conflict of interest, that the lawyer cannot represent such constituent, and that such person may wish to obtain independent representation. Care must be taken to assure that the individual understands that, when there is such adversity of interest, the lawyer for the organization cannot provide legal representation for that constituent individual, and that discussions between the lawyer for the organization and the individual may not be privileged.

Comment 12. Dual representation.

Paragraph (e) Recognizes that a lawyer for an organization may also represent individuals within the organization. When an organization's lawyer is assigned or authorized to represent such an individual, the lawyer has an attorney-client relationship with both that individual and the organization. Accordingly, the lawyer's representation of both is controlled by the confidentiality and conflicts provisions of these rules.

6. Prospective clients. Rule 1.18.

a. Rule 1.18.a provides that a person who discusses with a lawyer the possibility of forming a client-lawyer relationship is a "prospective client".

Rule 1.18.b provides that a lawyer owes a duty of confidentiality to a prospective client.

Rule 1.18.c provides that a lawyer may not represent a client adverse to a prospective client if the lawyer received information from that prospective client that could be harmful to that person.

b. Best practices.

1. Run a conflicts check before any substantive communication with a prospective client.

2. Advise the prospective client not to provide any confidential or sensitive information to the lawyer (to the extent possible) until the lawyer has decided whether to accept the representation.

3. Decline to speak with a prospective client if the lawyer knows that he or she will probably not accept the representation.

4. In appropriate circumstances, document that the lawyer declined the representation and did not receive any confidential or sensitive information from the prospective client.

III. Ongoing Communications With Clients. Rule 1.4

1. Rule 1.4 requires a lawyer to communicate with clients. The Rule has three basic elements:

a. The status of the matter. Rule 1.4.a.

b. Explanations reasonably necessary to permit the client to make informed decisions. Rule 1.4.b.

c. Inform the client of pertinent facts and of settlement communications from another party. Rule 1.4.c.

2. Preserving the attorney-client privilege. Rule 1.6. The lawyer should prominently mark confidential communications as protected by the attorney-client privilege.

3. Means of communications. The lawyer can keep the client advised of the status of the matter by combination of formal reports (letters, memoranda, substantive emails) and/or less formal communications (copies of communications with others; informal emails; telephone discussions; verbal status reports).

4. The lawyer's goal. The lawyer's goal is to allow the client to understand the status of the matter and what the lawyer is doing. The lawyer should avoid the situation where the client is calling the lawyer and asking what is going on. See Rule 1.3, Comment 3 ("Perhaps no professional shortcoming is more widely resented than procrastination.").

5. Status. A lawyer's failure to keep the client advised on the status of a matter can be the basis for professional discipline. See Green v. Virginia State Bar, 278 Va. 162, 170 (2009); Bauman v. Virginia State Bar, 299 Va. 80, 95-97 (2020).

6. Settlement. In State Farm Mutual Automobile Insurance Company v. Floyd, 235 Va. 136, 144 (1988), the lawyer representing a defendant in an automobile accident, appointed by an insurance company, did not advise the defendant of a settlement offer from the plaintiff during the trial. The Court held that the attorney's failure to communicate the plaintiff's offers to the defendant driver did not, by itself, amount to a furtherance of the insurer's interest with intentional disregard of the financial interest of the insured.

IV. Billing.

1. Engagement Letter. The Engagement Letter should state when and how the lawyer will bill the client.

2. Time entries/billing entries/establishing value.

a. The lawyer should prepare billing entries with care. The lawyer should use periodic billing as a means to report to the client what the lawyer is doing and the value of the lawyer's work. Clients read lawyer's bills closely; and they have opinions about what and how the lawyer is billing for.

The lawyer's time and task entries, and other work descriptions, should describe the work done. The entries can describe communications between the lawyer and the client to document the lawyer's compliance with the client communication provisions of Rule 1.4.

The client should not be left to wonder what work was done. In this context, detailed billing entries promote a good attorney-client relationship.

3. Timely billing.

Clients expect a lawyer to send timely bills. The lawyer should meet this expectation—a good lawyer takes care of business.

The lawyer should confirm that the bills are sent to the correct person, at the correct address, using the form of communication the client prefers, and including the information the client expects.

4. Large bills. If a lawyer is sending a large bill after a period of significant work or a billing milestone has been reached, consider calling the client and explaining that the bill is coming and what is in the bill. This type of discussion can be awkward, but it is much better than having the client have a moment of frustration or anger when he or she opens the bill—no matter how good the lawyer's work has been.

5. When is a fee earned?

The case law establishes that a court will consider the factors listed in Rule 1.5.a and 1.5.b in evaluating the reasonableness of a lawyer's fee. The key factors include:

a. The time and labor required.

b. The novelty and difficulty of the questions presented.

c. The fee customarily charged in the locality for similar services.

d. The amount of money involved in the dispute.

e. The results obtained.

f. The lawyer's experience.

g. Whether the lawyer adequately explained the fee to the client.

In Bauman v. Virginia State Bar, 299 Virginia 80, 95-97 (2020), the Court upheld a disciplinary finding that a lawyer had charged an unreasonable fee under Rule 1.5.a in a dispute involving a trust and estate matter. The lawyer charged the client $7,500 as "flat fee" for the work. The Court's decision was based on several factors, including: the lawyer's failure to accomplish the objectives of the representation; the matter was not complex; the lawyer did not document or use the legal research that he said he had performed; the fee significantly exceeded the fees charged by the other attorneys involved in the case; the fee was based, at least in part, on work the lawyer never performed; the fee was not justified by the time and labor required to resolve the matter; and the lawyer's cursory billing statement of "Professional Services Rendered" did not establish that the charged fee was reasonable.

6. Managing accounts receivable.

The lawyer should follow up with the client on keeping the payment of lawyer fees current. If the client has questions about the billing, answer the questions. No one benefits from overdue or accumulated unpaid lawyer fees.

7. Closing statement in contingency fee cases.

Rule 1.5.c provides:

> Upon conclusion of a contingent fee matter, the lawyer shall provide the client with a written statement stating the outcome of the matter and, if there is a recovery, showing the remittance to the client and the method of its determination.

8. Closing files.

It is a best practice to notify a client that a matter has been completed and that the lawyer is closing the file.

9. Time entries in contingency fee cases.

Many lawyers do not like to keep time records in contingency fee cases. Nevertheless, time entries in contingency fee cases can be helpful as a time management and organizational tool. Time entries also allow the lawyer to evaluate whether a case, or type of case, has been profitable.

Finally, the time entries are essential to prove the value of the lawyer services in the context of a quantum meruit or attorney's lien situation (Va. Code § 54.1-3932). See Heinzman v. Fine, Fine, Legum, and Fine, 217 Va. 958. 964 (1977) ("Having in mind the special nature of a contract for legal services, we hold that when, as here, an attorney employed under a contingent fee contract is discharged without cause and the client employs another attorney who effects a recovery, the discharge attorney is entitled to a fee based on quantum meruit for services rendered prior to discharge and as security for such fee, to the lien granted by Code § 54-70." (now Code § 54.1-3932)).

V. Client Accounting. Rule 1.15.

Rule 1.15.a.1 provides that all funds received or held by a lawyer on behalf of a client or a third party must be held by a lawyer as a fiduciary. The lawyer must deposit all such funds in an identified trust account. Rule 1.15, Comment 2.

A lawyer must keep the lawyer's funds segregated from the client trust accounts. Rule 1.15.a.3 and 1.15.c.

In Green v. Virginia State Bar, 278 Va. 162, 178-9 (2009), the Supreme Court held that a lawyer violated Rule 1.15.a.2 by depositing an advance payment of a legal fee into an escrow account and then withdrawing those funds immediately without the funds being earned.

A lawyer must notify the client of the receipt of client funds. Rule 1.15.b.1.

A lawyer must keep accounting records of client funds. Rule 1.15.b.4, 1.15.c, 1.15.d.

VI. Confidentiality. Rule 1.6.

1. Rule 1.6.a provides that a lawyer shall not reveal information protected by the attorney-client privilege or other information gained in the professional relationship.

A lawyer should explain the attorney-client privilege to the client and how the privilege generally allows confidential communications between the client and the lawyer.

A lawyer is authorized to disclose information in order to carry out the representation.

2. Staff. A lawyer must train and supervise staff to reasonably protect the confidential information of clients. See Rule 1.6.c, 1.6.d, Comment 9; Rules 5.1 and 5.3.

3. Technology, third party vendors, facilities. A lawyer must have appropriate safeguards in place to protect the confidential and proprietary information of clients. Rules 1.6.a, 5.1, and 5.3.

These safeguards could include:

1. Contractual agreements with vendors and service providers requiring confidentiality and non-disclosure safeguards.

2. Leases, other agreements, and physical features of facilities that limit access to areas where confidential and sensitive information is kept.

3. Use of passwords and other security measures to protect access to electronically stored information. Rule 1.6, Comment 21.

4. Use of data backup and data storage practices to protect confidential and sensitive information from loss.

5. Inadvertent disclosure. A lawyer must make reasonable efforts to prevent the inadvertent disclosure of confidential information. Rule 1.6.d, Comment 19.

VII. Technology

1. Rule 1.1 provides that a lawyer shall provide competent representation to a client. One element of competent representation is the ability to work reasonably with technology.

The technological tools available in legal practice include: email; word processing; document management; legal research platforms; electronically stored information and discovery platforms; litigation and case management platforms; database and document management platforms; Excel and spreadsheet platforms; PowerPoint and presentation platforms; electronic depositions and trial transcripts; billing and timekeeping platforms; and resources that check conflicts of interests.

A lawyer must work with the appropriate technological tools and be familiar with less essential tools. A lawyer should have technical assistance available to help the lawyer manage the technology.

VIII. Electronically stored information/discovery.

All discovery is now ESI discovery. A lawyer with a litigation practice must be able to manage the discovery of electronically stored information. These skills include: preserving ESI; the preparation of effective document requests; managing the review of documents and compliance with document requests; managing ESI to allow effective review and evaluation; and the use of ESI in discovery and litigation.

There are several platforms and service vendors available to help manage ESI discovery work. The capabilities and cost of these services vary widely.

It takes time, effort and experience to work through the efficient and effective use of these tools to manage the ESI discovery process.

IX. Settlement.

As discussed above, Rule 1.4.c provides that a lawyer shall inform the client of facts and communications that may significantly affect settlement or resolution of the matter. See Rule 1.4, Comment 5.

X. Supervision. Rules 5.1 and 5.3 and 1.6.d.

Rule 5.1 and 5.3 require that a law firm have measures in place giving reasonable assurances that lawyer and staff conform to the rules.

The measures used to meet this provision can include:

1. Continuing legal education for lawyers.

2. Continuing professional education for non-lawyer staff.

3. Policies and procedures in place to protect confidential and proprietary information.

4. The availability of appropriate resources and technology to lawyers and staff.

5. Ongoing training and day to day supervision.

XI. Candor, Cooperation, and Fair Dealing.

The Preamble to the Ethics Rules states:

> A lawyer's conduct should conform to the requirements of the law, both in professional service to clients and in the lawyer's business and personal affairs. A lawyer should use the law's procedures only for legitimate purposes and not to harass or intimidate others. A lawyer should demonstrate respect for the legal system and for those who serve it, including judges, other lawyers and public officials. While it is a lawyer's duty, when necessary, to challenge the rectitude of official action, it is also a lawyer's duty to uphold legal process.

The rules require that lawyers respect the rights of others, including the courts, opposing and adverse parties, and third parties. The primary rules implementing these interests include:

1. Rule 3.1. Meritorious Claims.

2. Rule 3.4. Fairness to opposing parties and counsel.

3. Rule 4.1. Truthfulness in statements to others.

4. Rule 4.2. Communicating with persons represented by counsel. In Zaug v. Virginia State Bar, 285 Va. 457 (2013), the Supreme Court held that a lawyer did not violate Rule 4.2 when she answered a telephone call from a represented party, spoke briefly with caller, and terminated the call as soon as was practical in a polite manner.

   Rule 4.2 addresses when a lawyer can speak with employees of a represented party. See Comment 7. See Compendium Legal Ethics Opinion on Rule 4:2; LEO 1890 (2021); Communications with Represented Person.

5. Rule 4.3. Dealing with unrepresented parties.

6. Rule 4.4. Respect for rights of third parties.

XII. Termination of the Attorney-Client Relationship. Rule 1.16.

A client can terminate the attorney-client relationship at any time for any reason. Rule 1.16.a.3; Comment 4.

A lawyer can terminate the representation as permitted under Rule 1.3.b and 1.16.

Rule 1.16.a provides that a lawyer shall withdrawal from the representation of a client when the representation will result in a violation of the Rules, the lawyer's physical or mental condition materially impairs the lawyer's ability to represent the client, or the lawyer is discharged.

Rule 1.16.b provides that a lawyer may withdrawal from representing a client if withdrawal can be accomplished without material adverse effect on the interest of the client, or if: the client persists in a course of action involving the lawyer's services that the lawyer reasonably believes is illegal or unjust; the client used the lawyer's services to perpetrate a crime or fraud; or the client insists upon pursuing an objective that the lawyer considers repugnant or imprudent; the client fails substantially to fulfill an obligation to the lawyer regarding the lawyer's services; the representation will result in an unreasonable financial burden on the lawyer; or other good cause for withdrawal exists.

In litigation matters, a lawyer is allowed to withdrawal only with leave of court after compliance with notice requirements.

XIII. Experts and third party consultants/vendors.

1. Confidentiality. A lawyer should consider including a provision establishing a duty of confidentiality, non-disclosure, and non-use in all contracts and agreements with experts and third party consultants and vendors that may have access to confidential or sensitive business information of a client.

2. Elements of expert agreement. Agreements with experts and third party consultants should address:

a. The scope of the work. This should be done in some detail.

b. The standard of professional care.

c. The fee.

d. Confidentiality, non-disclosure and non-use of confidential and proprietary information.

3. Discovery of expert communications. Rule 4:1(b)(4) provides that discovery of facts known and opinions held by experts may be obtained only by: an expert interrogatory; deposition of the expert; or upon motion, by further discovery. Drafts of expert reports and expert disclosures are not discoverable except on a showing of exceptional circumstances. Communications between a party's attorney and an expert are not discoverable except for compensation issues and to identify facts or assumptions that the expert considered or relied on.

The Supreme Court has characterized the provisions of Rule 4:1(b)(4) as the "exclusive method" for discovery expert opinions. Flora v. Shulmister, 262 Va. 215, 222 (2001).

Under these provisions, communications between an attorney and an expert, and draft reports and expert disclosures, are generally protected from disclosure in discovery.

4. Experts as professionals.

The lawyer should work with the expert to make sure the expert meets expectations as a professional. This process includes the engagement, the collection of information and materials, the fact investigation, the professional research and analysis, the conclusions reached, the drafting the expert report or expert disclosure, the deposition of the expert, and trial testimony.

a. Misconduct

A court can sanction an expert for misconduct at a deposition, such as making offensive comments, engaging in hostile and uncivil conduct, and impeding the deposition. See Almeida-Graves v. Seaworld Parks & Entertainment, LLC, Memorandum Order, February 16, 2024, E.D. Va., Civil Action No. 4:22 cv 127 (sanctions against expert witness).; See also GMAC Bank v. HTFC Corp., 248 F.R.D. 182, 198-199 (E.D. Pa., 2008) (sanction imposed against expert witness and counsel based on misconduct during deposition).

XIV. Doing business with clients.

Lawyers sometimes are presented with the possibility of entering into a business relationship with a client. These possibilities can create problems for the lawyer and should be carefully considered. If anything goes wrong with the business venture, the client will look to blame the lawyer.

Rule 1.8 governs business transactions between lawyers and clients. In Shea v. Virginia State Bar Disciplinary Board, 236 Va. 442 (1988), the Supreme Court stated that Rule 1.8 is intended and designed to maintain the independent judgement of lawyers in the representation of clients.

Rule 1.8.a provides that a lawyer shall not enter into a business relationship with a client unless:

1. The transaction and terms are fair and reasonable to the client and fully disclosed and transmitted in writing to the client.

2. The client has the opportunity to seek independent counsel.

3. The client consents in writing.

Rule 1.8.c provides that a lawyer should not solicit any substantial gift from a client, including a testamentary gift.

Rule 1.8.e provides that a lawyer shall not provide financial assistance to a client in connection with pending or contemplated litigation; except that a lawyer may advance court costs and litigation expenses.

Rule 1.8.f provides that a lawyer shall not accept compensation for representing a client from one other than the client unless the client consents after consultation.
